A Leaderless Land

Georgia's Experiment

Spain's Turmoil

THE REV. ALBERT PARKER FITCH, D. D., of New York's Park Avenue Presbyterian Church tells the graduating class of Lawrenceville School that they are about to enter "a leaderless world."

At this time, when the world is in greatest need of leaders, said Dr. Fitch, it has no leaders.

That is true of this country, and several others, but not of the whole world. Russia has a leader in Stalin. He knows where he is going.

Mussolini and Kemal Pasha lead by the power of will and dictatorship. We should not care for that in this country.

But there is such a thing as American leadership, and a little of it would be welcome.

It is rather startling to read that this richest, most powerful and self-elected "most intelligent" country in the world borrows eight hundred million dollars and will spend the money to make up a deficit.

And in the same week Stalin borrows eight hundred million dollars and will spend that money to build factories, construct agricultural machinery and give employment.

Perhaps we were not absolutely accurate in our decision that the Russians didn't know anything, couldn't do anything.

Since we have no leadership of our own, why not send to Russia, Turkey, Italy, and find out whether any of their ideas could be acclimated here without interfering too seriously with our interesting mixture of a patient people, and a well-meaning financial government, by organized capital?

In this so-called "world without leaders, and without a plan," the State of Georgia sets a good example. A committee of one hundred, well chosen, will promote Georgia's welfare, industrial, commercial, and all of its possibilities.

The one hundred leaders will make it their business to create the right feeling and the right enthusiasm in the State, and get the right results outside.

Religious antagonism continues in Spain. Cardinal Pedro Segura Y Saenz, highest Catholic dignitary, was deported by the Republican government yesterday.

After leaving the country of his own accord he returned in disguise, and succeeded in his determination to be arrested and imprisoned.

There was no charge against Cardinal Saenz, except that he urged the voters to elect to the new parliament men who would protect the interests of the Catholic Church. This was followed by anti-Catholic rioting.

Cardinal Saenz did not advise any rebellion against the Republican government, and it is not much of a republic in which a man may not speak his mind.

Three thousand advertising men are gathered in New York. Advertising intelligence is perhaps the most important form of intelligence now, for it is the intelligence that pushes business and restores prosperity.

Letting people know you have what they want is even more important than having it.

Advertising is the buyer's guarantee. A man does not set fire to his factory when it is uninsured. A name cannot be insured and a man, after he has built it up, does not destroy it.

Tiffany & Co. could not afford to sell an imitation diamond, they would rather have their store burned down.

Every great business has more value in good will than in all its plants.

Suppose burglars entered Morgan & Co.'s office, saying "take your choice. We are going to take away your name or take away all the money in the place." The firm would say, "Take the money."

Advertise, BUILD UP YOUR NAME.

Milwaukee, as you may have read in this column some time ago, knows how to deal with the "crime wave." And is carefully boycotted by gangsters, racketeers, and the whole of the disreputable army.

Cyrus H. K. Curtis verifies the statement that the police of Milwaukee discourages criminals, instead of going into partnership with them. On one occasion, an enterprising group of Chicago criminals decided that there was nothing to the stories about Milwaukee's anti-crime drive, or Milwaukee's police, not "open to reasonable argument."

These Chicago criminals operated in Milwaukee one day, and they had their breakfast in State's prison the next.

What Milwaukee does, everybody could do, except for the fact that politicians higher up deal with wholesale bootleg criminals, and those lower down deal with the smaller thieves.

A crime wave is one thing, and handling it need not be difficult, if it were confined to the ordinary criminal circles.

But when the heart of the crime wave is in politics, and in

International News Correspondent

Marion, O., June 16—Over the tomb of Warren G. Harding there was spoken today a courageous defense of his maligned administration, and a magnificent tribute to his memory as a man—a man "betrayed by his friends."

Here in the shadow of the beautiful Grecian memorial which Harding's friends erected to him, President Hoover broke the silence of years to extol the kindly human qualities of the 29th President and to excoriate in terms of extreme bitterness those who, as he said, betrayed him.

Mr. Hoover named no names, but his reference to the oil scandals was so plain and unmistakable that no one in the vast throng had the slightest doubt whom he meant.

COOLIDGE LAUDS HIM

On the platform as an interested participant of the dedicatory exercises was Calvin Coolidge, the taciturn New Englander, who earlier in the proceedings had himself paid high tribute to the man whom he succeeded in the Presidency.

Mr. Coolidge, however, made no references to "betrayals," confining himself to a survey of the really monumental legislative record of the Harding administration.

The tomb, containing the bodies of President Harding and his wife, Florence Kling Harding, was the magnet toward which thousands of visitors made their way.

'DEATH DATE' OF 'PLAYBOY' DESCRIBED

By WIN BROOKS

Boston Evening American Staff Correspondent

Newport, R. I., June 16—Verna E. Russell's "death date" with Elliott R. Hathaway was described at Hathaway's trial for the murder of the Truesdale Hospital nurse this afternoon.

The Government, in a surprise move, called three Truesdale Hospital employes who testified in turn that "Pinky" Hathaway, 28-year-old son of a Massachusetts legislator, sought a "date" with Verna, that he made a date with Verna and that he kept it.

Standing in the courtroom, a half-smile on his lips, the Fall River playboy was once dramatically identified as the boy friend who called for Verna at the nurses' home of the Faulkner hospital on the night of March 23, when the state claims he strangled her at Tiverton.

STRANGLING RE-ENACTED

Again he was identified as having driven to a Fall River drug store, accompanied by a woman, on that same night.

The government called its new witnesses before placing Dr. George Burgess Magrath, Boston pathologist, on the witness stand.

During the morning a dramatic situation developed when Miss Lily Edin, attractive blonde assistant of Court Clerk Sydney Harvey, a girl of about the same age as the victim, was made the subject of

Peters Absolved in Faithfull Probe

Former Mayor Andrew J. Peters of Boston, who has been a target for rumors, counter-rumors and innuendo for a week, following the tragic death of Starr Faithfull, Greenwich Village butterfly, today discussed the case fully and frankly with the Boston Evening American.

As the Boston Evening American announced last week, Mr. Peters was never officially mentioned in the inquiry into the case of the former Beacon Hill beauty.

Dist. Atty. Edwards of Nassau County, who is directing the investigation of Miss Faithfull's death in the surf at Long Beach, L. I., declared today that he had eliminated Mr. Peters from the inquiry and did not need him as a grand jury witness.

WON'T BE SUBPOENAED

Informed today that former Mayor Peters had signified his willingness to appear before him or the grand jury at Mineola, Dist. Atty. Edwards said:

"I do not plan to subpoena Mr. Peters.

In an exclusive statement to the Boston Evening American today, Mr. Peters said:

As a result of a long-distance telephone call which I received at noon from New York, I have changed an earlier plan to communicate with Dist. Atty. Edwards.

"I learned from a reliable source in New York that Mr. Edwards had never said what he had been quoted as saying, namely, that he sought me as a voluntary witness.

"When I was informed last night that he had made such a statement I decided to get in touch with him today, but the information I received over the long-distance telephone changed the situation. I shall not communicate with him.

"I had planned to inform him that if he felt he had a scintilla of evidence which would lead him to think I could be of the slight-

Pictures on Page 3

By a Staff Correspondent

New York, June 16—"I'm not sorry Starr is dead."

Elizabeth Tucker Faithfull, the calm, reticent sister of the girl whose mysterious death has torn the veil from an unhappy family life, cracked under the strain of questioning and investigating, Dist. Atty. Edwards announced today.

"She's happier; everybody's happier," she cried.

This girl, something of an enigma herself, told today of Starr's dominating personality and of her cruelty.

SLAPPED HER FAMILY

Starr was stronger physically than either her mother or her sister. She excelled at Roger Hall school at Lowell, Mass., when she attended classes there, in swimming and other forms of athletics.

The girl told District Attorney Edwards today that Starr had ruled her family, slapping them and pinching them if she did not have her own way.

"Starr was evidently much stronger physically than her mother or her sister," Mr. Edwards said. "She was apparently stronger even than her stepfather, for I was told she used to slap him at times.

"Tucker said that, if breakfast wasn't ready soon enough to suit her, Starr used to slap her mother and pinch her arm so that the marks would remain there for days. Starr was exceedingly peevish, her sister said.

"Starr's domination was so complete, she said, that she even decided where the family would live."

The young woman's stepfather, mother and sister arrived in Minneola again today and went at once into conference with Inspector Harold King at police headquarters.

Before he went into the inspector's office, Stanley E. Faithfull was asked if he still believed his daughter had been murdered. He said he still did, but when he was asked if he had any idea who had done it, he replied:

"Absolutely not."

BOSTON LAWYER INVITED TO BE VOLUNTARY WITNESS

The name of the wealthy man who paid $20,000 in settlement for alleged misdeeds with Starr Faithfull, beautiful murder victim, may be given this week to Nassau County (N. Y.) grand jury.

Charles F. Rowley, Boston attorney, who admitted having settled for Starr and her family with the accused man, was invited today to appear as a voluntary witness before the grand jury which is conducting the inquiry.

The invitation was extended by Dist. Atty. Elvin Edwards of Nassau County, who further revealed that several other Bostonians, unnamed, may be extended similar invitations.

Meanwhile, the Boston Evening American has learned that, despite the wealthy man's payment of $20,000, a bold attempt to "shakedown" the payer was made within a few weeks of the murder of the exotic beauty.

Together with this new disclosure, the Boston Evening American, which yesterday printed exclusively Atty. Rowley's admission that he had acted for the girl in settling claims against a wealthy man, today reveals the secret story told by Stanley E. Faithfull, stepfather of Starr, to Dist. Atty. Edwards.

This story, confirmed by officials and Attorney Rowley, carries the story of the illicit pursuit of the youthful Starr by the wealthy Bostonian back to her school days in the fashionable Rogers Hall in Lowell.

Other developments today in the mystery of the slaying of Starr, whose body was washed ashore at Long Beach, L. I., were:

1—Reconvening the grand jury postponed from today to Friday, and perhaps next week, for appearance of prominent Boston men as witnesses.

2—Dispatching of detectives to this city to ferret out all the facts bearing on the astounding past of the titian-haired "party girl."

3—Search for two men and a ravishing blonde who were with Starr on the last party she attended before her death.

4—Increased activity of investigating officials with announcement by medical experts that Starr was drugged into insensibility before she was slain.

5—Bitter attack was made by the slain girl's stepfather on officials for "laxity." He said he believed she was killed by blackmailers to silence her.

BOSTONIAN WARNED

Boston Evening American reporters learned that as late as this spring the prominent Boston man who despoiled Starr in her childhood, according to her stepfather, received warning that after five years, he would again be asked to pay in cash for degradation of the girl.

This startling disclosure, for the first time linking Starr's astounding past with the period of her life immediately preceding her violent death, was branded as of the utmost importance by New York officials.

It was learned that an unidentified individual made arrangements with a New York writer to tell the whole story of the alleged childhood maltreatment of the girl whose family ties connected her with Boston bluebloods.

Blackmail or publicity—either one was to have meant financial gain to the plotters, who somehow had learned the amazing story of Starr's distorted childhood.

The Boston millionaire was then apprised of the arrangement and given a fright that produced a rapid series of events leading almost to the day of the girl's death.

PLOT PROBED

Frantic efforts were made by his representatives to ascertain the source of the plot.

A lawyer was dispatched to New York, but the sum of his inquiry was a statement by Stanley Faithfull, stepfather of the girl, that Starr must have babbled to somebody, but to whom he could not guess.

Still in fear and trembling over the possibility of blackmail or public revelations, the Boston man was startled anew when he read last week of the finding of her body on the sand at Long Beach, N. Y.

One of two things occurred, investigating officials declare.

The conspirators lay low to size up the situation and decide which course to pursue for the greatest financial reward, when like a bolt from the blue to all parties concerned came the slaying.

Or else Starr took a hand in the matter herself, and the plotters had her launched into eternity to end her interference.

DRUGGED BY BETRAYER

That she was in a stupor when the hand of death fell on her was announced by Dr. Alexander O. Goettler, New York city toxicologist, after further analysis of the vital organs.

Manhattan and Nassau County authorities today questioned Miss Anita Valentine of 49 Morton st., in New York's Greenwich Village, the girl who is reported to have heard screams from the roof of the Faithfull home a day or so before Starr disappeared.

The Morton st. address is near that of the Faithfulls' in St. Luke's pl.

District Attorney Edwards, in talking with newspapermen today at Mineola, reiterated that the investigators are "more positive than ever that Starr Faithfull was murdered."

"We have been criticized unduly by certain people," he said, "for the way we have pressed this investigation, but with the expectation of receiving the written report of Dr. Gettler, concerning the drugs found in the vital organs, we feel highly elated at the manner in which we have pressed the investigation.

"Inspector Harold King has today furnished me with a report of more than 50 phases of this case which have been completely developed.

"I place great faith in the clue that has to do with the two key witnesses, the men who accompanied Starr during the last two days of her life."

REFUSES TO TELL

The district attorney refused to say whether these were Boston men and refused to state also if Francis Peabody Hamlin of Boston is the man who introduced Starr to the two men declared by Dist.-Atty. Edwards to be Jack Greenway and Bruce Winston.

Members of the Faithfull family were at Mineola courthouse today in expectation of the grand jury's reconvening, but were disappointed.

"When still a child, she was maltreated by a Boston man, old enough to be her father," said Faithfull, according to the leader of the murder investigation.

"He took advantage of her when she played with his own children, who were but a few years younger than she.

"This colored her whole after life, made her a girl of moods, abnormal but not insane."

In this connection, the Boston Evening American learned that a New York neurologist was called upon to treat the girl and found her view of life a strange one, that she was erotic and unable to react normally to the natural attractions of life to a young and beautiful girl.

Ether and chloroform were used in connection with her premature introduction to the mysteries of childhood, Faithfull is alleged to have asserted.

CONFESSED TO MOTHER

"He was very kind to Starr and her sister, Tucker," declared Faithful. "It was not until five years after he met her that we learned that his kindness had masked a relationship that clouded her mind.

"She came home from a hotel one day and blurted out a confession to her mother. We learned he had induced her to read him lurid bits from the writings of Havelock Ellis about sex influences.

"With administration of ether and chloroform, these readings put her in a state where misdeeds were possible. She shuddered as she told us of them.

"Bit by bit we found what Starr had gone through, of visits to hotels, of the anything but fatherly interest of this man who professed such an interest in her.

"We consulted alienists. They said Starr must have treatment. They said she must be restored to normal health gradually. It cost us a great deal more than we could afford but we would rather have been penniless and have her a normal girl, than save a nickel at the cost of her happiness.

SPURNED REVENGE

"We didn't think of revenge. A close friend of ours suggested that, offered to have him punished outside the law. But we silenced him and later Mrs. Faithfull mentioned that matter to a woman friend who put us in touch with a lawyer.

"The man first stormed and said it was extortion but later he paid $20,000 as a settlement for the damage to her and for necessary treatment.

"A month ago a man who said he was an attorney called and demanded to know whether any of us had been talking about Starr's past. We denied it but it is not beyond possibility that the story had come into the hands of persons who were using it to extort money.

"It might, we realize, have been Starr herself who uttered the words. She was a different person when she was drinking."

NAMES COMPANIONS

Faithfull gave the authorities the names of two men who he said could shed light on Starr's affairs just prior to her disappearance, one of whom he knew as Jack Greenaway, an actor, and the other a Bruce Winston.

"If these two men are found, I believe it will go a long way to aid in solving the mystery," said Faithfull.

Starr met the two men at an artist's studio. She went with them to a party given by Peggy Hopkins Joyce, much-married actress. Starr arranged to meet Greenaway and Winston again on Thursday, June 4, in a little restaurant. This, at least, is the version of the father, based on information he said he obtained from talking with Starr.

Miss Joyce denied she ever had met the Starr girl or that Starr had ever attended a party given by her.

The actress said she was out of town on the day of the supposed party mentioned by Starr's stepfather.

Faithfull said that Starr was introduced to these two men by Francis Peabody Hamlin, scion of an aristocratic Boston family, who has aided the authorities materially on his own volition in their search for the slayer of the girl.

Faithfull described his stepdaughter as the most beautiful girl at the fashionable Rogers Hall School at Lowell while in her 'teens, and declared that the wealthy Boston man called for her there and accompanied her on rides through the country on spirited horses, of which Starr was fond. He said the Bostonian took her to his summer place with his own children.

KEPT AGREEMENT

Miss Olive Parsons, principal of Rogers Hall School, asserted today that in order to accompany other than a member of her family away from the school a student must first obtain consent of her parents or guardian.

"The only time students are allowed to leave is when their requests have the approval of their parents," Miss Parsons said. "Then and only then the permission is granted. The rule is inviolable."

Atty. Charles F. Rowley of Boston in his statement to the Evening American likewise refused to name the Boston man who paid so dearly.

"I effected a full settlement for Starr Faithfull and her family as the result of the story she told me in the presence of her mother, her sister and her adopted father," he said.

"She denied misconduct, but told of other things. One reason I took the case was because of its nature and for fear that some disreputable lawyer might be consulted if I dropped the case and that he might resort to blackmail.

"I don't care to state what relations she told me about but they were not those of a father and daughter, as the man in question insisted from start to finish. I don't care to state the amount paid but if Mr. Faithfull says it was $20,000, I won't deny it.

ROW ON LINER

"I do not consider the amount paid excessive in view of the rest cure and treatment she might have had to undergo as a result of her condition. She had been to a Wellesley sanitarium for treatment.

"The day before she disappeared her stepfather, Stanley Faithfull, came into my office here in Boston and talked about refinancing his wife's real estate on Cape Cod, but no professional services resulted from this visit."

For the first time it was revealed today that Starr engaged in a fight aboard the Cunard liner Franconia in the cabin of Dr. G. Cameron Carr, the ship's physician.

Francis Hamlin of Boston has satisfied authorities that he was not in that cabin that day, but he has promised to inform the authorities, if he learns, who the two men were who were there.

On the day she disappeared, Starr went to see Dr. Carr but he refused to see her because she had displeased him, Dist. Atty. Edwards said.

TAXI MAN'S STORY

Disclosure was made today by Murray Edelman, a taximan in New York, that twice on June 5, the day she disappeared, he had driven Starr Faithfull from the Cunard steamship pier to her home at 12 St. Luke's pl.

On the first occasion, he said, she was sober and was accompanied by a man whose name she mentioned, and which Edelman has given to the authorities. This trip was made about 11 a. m., and when Starr reached home she said to the man, an Englishman, about 37 years old:

"Bye, bye. I'll see you this afternoon."

The man remonstrated, however, saying:

"Don't come back this afternoon, as the passengers will be embarking."

Starr replied:

"I must come back to see you."

Edelman said he drove the Englishman back to the pier where the liner Mauretania was docked, after the man had remarked to the driver:

"The heck with her. Drive me back to the pier."

Two hours later, Edelman related, he was surprised to see Starr again emerging from the pier office, this time dazed and appearing very drunk.

"The same man who had been with her earlier," said Edelman, "opened my car door and told me to take her to 12 St. Luke's pl."

The man said, according to Edelman:

"Don't bring her back to the pier under any circumstances, as I can't be bothered with her."

The taxi man said he had driven Starr only to 10th ave. and 14th st. when she got out with the statement that she had only 10 cents. He never saw her again. Edelman told police he could identify the Englishman if he saw him again, but a search of the rolls of the Mauretania reveals no such name as that given by the taxi driver.

A vitriolic attack on Nassau County authorities, who, he declared, are "getting nowhere," was made by Faithfull today.

The elderly chemist and the authorities have been antagonistic toward each other from the start of the investigation, the situation being climaxed Saturday when Faithfull demanded return to him of Starr's revealing perfumed diary. The demand was denied curtly.

"NEVER HER ADVISER"

"I haven't seen any of the Faithfull family, neither Mrs. Faithfull, either of the daughters or their stepfather in years, not for five or six years at least."

"Did you ever act as Starr Faithfull's guardian, or legal adviser while she was in Boston, while she was attending a private school in Lowell or after she went with her parents to New York?" he was asked.

"I never did," Mr. Peters answered.

"Did you ever have any social or legal dealings with the girl?"

"No."

"Or with her family?"

"No."

"Was any claim ever made against you by Starr Faithfull or her stepfather?"

"No."

Q—Mr. Whiteside, speaking in your behalf, stated that you never had any particular relationship with Starr Faithfull? A—That is true.

Q—Did you ever have any social dealings with the girl in Boston or after she went to New York? A—None whatever.

Earlier, Atty. Whiteside, following a long conference with former Mayor Peters, said:

"As a result of what has been published in certain newspapers, Mr. Peters decided to communicate today with Dist. Atty. Edwards and tell him he would appear before him or the Nassau county grand jury if Edwards felt he had a scrap of evidence on which Mr. Peters could be of any assistance.

DENIES PETERS' CONNECTION

"Mr. Peters knew when he came to this decision that there was no such evidence but he thought it would be best to communicate with Dist. Atty. Edwards in view of the fact that Edwards had never tried to communicate with Mr. Peters either directly or indirectly.

"Edwards did not interview or attempt to interview Mr. Peters when he was in Boston last week, nor did he send anyone to interview Mr. Peters.

"Mr. Peters wishes me to state for him that he never had relationship with Starr Faithfull of any nature at any time. That cannot be said with too much emphasis.

KNOWS OF NO PAYMENT

"I know nothing about any claim or settlement for $20,000.

"There has been a lot of loose talk in this case. It would seem from the reports published that Starr Faithfull was a psycopathic who imagined many things that never happened.

Reports that Mr. Peters retained me as counsel to handle his case are not true. Mr. Peters does not need counsel in this matter.

"It is true that he conferred with me earlier today, but he came to me as a friend and I am making this statement as his friend and not in the capacity of counsel."

Love Letters of Slain Girl Are Revealed at the New York Inquiry

love and the thrills of a life abandoned to pleasure, for she frankly told them in her letters from London.

The letters, made public today by her mother, Helen McGregor Faithfull, reveal that she even told her that she had been invited to share the new flat of an English lord and that she had declined merely because she had become "very, platonic."

In many of the letters Starr used only initials in referring to her loves and the proposals made to her while she was in London.

She wrote the following letter to her mother on the stationery of the Savoy Hotel, London:

"I am all settled in the new house, namely the Commodore Hotel, 4 Pembroke sq. I told you about D. B. He is buying a car and is really trying hard to make up for bein' nasty to Susie that she has forgiven him practically. Cheerioski."

The letter was "signed" with a drawn star instead of a signature. In another letter she told of the proposal made to her by Lord Brendon.

"Do you do a great deal of racing around with Tucker in the car?" she said. Tucker tells me you have a most marvelous new Packard. When you come over bring it along. If Mr. S—— was better looking I would heap coals of fire on his head by asking him to dinner at the Commodore. He looks exactly like a match before it is lit.

"Really, you know London pubs are a study in themselves. They have the variety of ships or people.

"About my amours, I have none at present, as I am going through a very platonic phase starting after my row with D. B. The last I saw him I told him he looked like a plump bird with big wondering eyes. I am having him to dinner tonight and afterward drive in his new car.

"My other loves (the word "loves" was ringed), are away. D. D. is too fragile to appeal to me. R. H., the artist, was a bit too rough. When a person is beastly I get that way myself, and the result was too —— noisy so that the landlord complained.

"The English look upon the Americans as being crude, loud and with horrible accents.

"A man named Lord Brendon wanted me to go to Budapest (how in —— do you spell it? B. begs I go live with him in a new flat. As I told you, I have become very platonic. It is a great state to be in."

STARR FAITHFULL A MENTAL CASE, WRITING SHOWS

Slain Girl an Example to Others of Sex, Says Expert

By RUTH MUGGLEBEE

New York, N. Y., June 16—Starr Faithfull is today a name but her prototype goes on and on.

She was a smart intellectual, but in her smartness there was unhappiness.

She was a hedonist, but in her hedonistic philosophy there was futility.

She was artistic, but in her artistry there was madness.

And in such young women the world abounds.

CITED AS EXAMPLE

And for such young women the world must do something, Miss Louise Rice, noted graphologist, head of the Graphological Institute of America, maintains.

Miss Rice, whose analysis and reading of handwriting has figured in several of the most prominent criminal cases of the country, asks that Starr Faithfull be set up as an example.

What happened to this beautiful girl of a cultured home can happen to others, she says.

"They are mad for life and in their frenzied quest they lose all sense of proportions. The death of Starr Faithfull will do more for young girls than all the sermons of the world.

"Tell young girls that for every pleasure there is a price.

"If Starr Faithfull had been a normal girl and married a compatibly normal man who was suited to her complexity physically and mentally, she would not be dead today.

"She should have been carefully sheltered all her life. Instead she was thrown into the life's mad whirl and she took a costly fling.

HANDWRITING VARIES

"Seven distinct samples of handwriting were manifest in the girl's diary. Seven types that revealed emotions ordinarily foreign to a girl of her age."

The slim "terribly pathetic" diary of sophistication and bald eroticism which Miss Rice examined for the Nassau County authorities in an effort to throw light on the fantastic murder of the gin loving, champagne drinking girl, reveals four or five motives for her murder, the expert says.

"These motives are those brought about by a girl of Miss Faithfull's position," she continued, "who parties with every Tom, Dick and Harry, goes to places of questionable repute and security. She seeks the thrill of life in precipical pleasures.

"She knows too much. She has seen too much. And the fun she took where she found it undermines the very foundation upon which life is founded.

"There are many such Starr Faithfulls today.

PATHOLOGICAL CASE

"Starr Faithfull was a pathological case. Her early horrifying experience left her mind warped and incapable of coping with adult situations. At heart she was a child.

"The girl's diary is a psychological history of her life. She write seven different scripts. When she was at peace she used an upright, light-pressure script, refined and distinguished. But in her most erotic moods she wrote a forward, leaning, heavy-pressure, ugly, muddy script that showed she seemingly experienced a vicarious thrill out of telling her reactions to sex experiences.

The Diary Reveals Her Pathetic Fight of Inner Self

"The girl imagined far more than she experienced. I doubt, however, if her sex life was as lurid as she depicted it on the pages of the diary.

"Much of it seemed to be colored by the girl's own imagination. She was brought up on Freud, and having been psychoananyzed she was taught to put down everything without reservation or restraint. She did and I think that probably she was carried away many times.

"When very young Starr lost her emotional balance and stability. She was a problem girl, yet she had never been treated as such.

"She drank to find release. I doubt if she was sober except for brief intervals during the last seven or eight years. She was a most extraordinary and extravagant character. She had innate qualities identified with gentility and breeding, but she hadn't the capabilities to handle them.

"Youth must have its fling. But youth sacrificing its virtues and integrities on the threshold of Bacchus is slowly going into a decline."

SUICIDE BARED BY GIRL'S STORY

Lawrence, June 16—The tearful story of little Helen McCarthy, 4, revealed the suicide of her mother, Mrs. Mary McCarthy, of 3 Colby st., this city, today.

Helen was found by pedestrians on Duck Bridge, Union st., holding her mother's pocket-book and pointing toward the swirling waters of the Merrimack rivver. She said her mother had brought her there, kissed her goodbye, left her the pocketbook, and then leaped over the side of the bridge.

Police and volunteers started a search of the waters but have not yet recovered the body. Because the current is swift and the watermark high, it is thought the body might have been carried downstream.

Mrs. McCarthy is the mother of four other children. They are Margaret, 16; Katherine, 14; Thmoas, 10, and Mary Ann, 7. Her husband, Thomas McCarthy is caretaker of a large Lawrence estate.

No reason for the woman's move has been established.

INTELLIGENT LOAFING GIVEN PRAISE OF HARVARD ORATOR

NEW HOUSE PLAN WINS APPROVAL OF STUDENTS

"Intelligent loafing is obviously one of the most valuable things an undergraduate can learn at Harvard."

As spokesman for Harvard graduates today, Paul Brooks of Cedarhurst, N. Y., class orator, made that startling statement at class day exercises in Sanders Theater.

It came in a comparison of old and new days at Harvard in a class oration that spoke almost entirely of the approval the students have made of the new house plan.

Starting the oration, Brooks told of the criticism 250 years ago of a scholar who visited Harvard when he found students in loud discussion in a room filled with tobacco smoke.

He told of another tale of the college a century ago that provided fines for "unnecessary walking on the Sabbath."

TWO EXTREME POINTS

"The points of view are admittedly extreme; they are the two opposite scale-pans by whose adjustment a balance is at this very moment being sought," he said.

"No one, I believe, will deny the value of enthusiastic discussion carried on by several young men in a haze of smoke.

"Loafing, in one sense of the word, is undoubtedly a fine art; intelligent loafing is obviously one of the most valuable things that an undergraduate can learn at Harvard.

"As a counterpoise to this there is the spirit which lies behind the rule against unnecessary walking on the Sabbath.

"Such a rule is indicative of a seriousness of mind on the part of the administration.

"All of which—tobacco smoke, loafing and walking on Sundays—is directly connected with the metamorphosis which is just now taking place in the external—and we hope the internal—appearance at Harvard."

HOUSE PLAN PRAISED

"The house plan, like the rule about Sunday deportment, is the practical application of an ideal."

The class ode and class poem were also delivered at the exercises, the latter also touching on the house plan:

"The class has been the first one to unite
Within new houses of the old domain.
We know their gradual progress, and we feel
This year has marked an era, all despite
The first vexations and the growing pain."

LAW RUNS DEEP INTO TANGLE

Heavy Rain Floods Streets; Causes Heavy Property Loss

COULD THEY TELL MORE?

How many of the rich men friends of Starr Faithfull are known to her sister, Tucker, and her mother, Mrs. Stanley Faithfull? Can they clear up the mystery of men friends? Do the two women, shown above, know the prominent Boston men referred to in the inquiry? Who are they? New York officials feel that both Elizabeth Tucker and Mrs. Faithfull know much more than they have made public or at least tell the inquiry officials.

WHAT IS THE ANSWER?

Did the beautiful Starr Faithfull come to her death by being tossed from the deck of a transatlantic liner by hired killers? Or was the girl who loved life, loved a good time all the time, forcibly drowned at Long Beach, L. I.? Or could she have been forcibly drowned at another point and tossed into the sea near the spot where her body was found?

A FRIEND OF STARR

Friend of the "Party Girl," Rex Fairbanks, said to be heir to more than a million dollars, admits in New York that he was a friend of Starr. He thinks that the butterfly was a suicide. He said he last heard from the Faithfull girl on March 26, but admitted that during last October he had been out with Starr 12 times. He also said that Starr always seemed to be depressed. STORM WASHES OUT SIDING AT FOREST HILLS

Rainfall Totals 7.82 Inches for June; Weather Man Says Rain Is to Continue

A railroad siding was washed out, streets and cellars were flooded in Boston and suburbs and considerable property damage was caused by a downpour that hit Boston shortly after midnight and continued during the day.

The Weather Bureau at noon reported no sign of a break until tomorrow, when fair and warmer weather in the afternoon is forecast. The rain will continue with occasional letups through tonight.

DOUBLE RAINFALL

The precipitation for the 24 hours up to observation time, about 8 a. m. today, was 3.35. Since that hour there has been considerable more precipitation. The fall for the first 16 days of the month is 7.82 inches, just double the normal June rainfall.

The Weather Bureau said the month of June promises to become one of the outstanding wet months in the history of the bureau.

An eight-foot brick chimney atop the two and a half-story wooden dwelling at 87-89 Baxter st., South Boston, was washed from its foundation and fell to the street. No one was injured.

In Brighton the heavy rain was believed responsible for the breaking of an electric light wire in front of 222 Fuller st. The wire fell across the street and plunged a considerable area in that section into darkness when a short circuit resulted. Emergency crews repaired the wire.

The washout in Forest Hills occurred on a siding of the H. P. Hood & Co., about 50 feet from the Forest Hills station. A section about 20 feet long and eight feet deep was washed away onto Anawan st. A crew of men was sent to the scene by the track supervisors' department of the New Haven road with several carloads of cinders to refill the washed out area.

DOUMER TO PUT PEACE FIRST

Paris, June 16 (AP)—Problems hinging upon settlement of the war debt and execution of the peace treaties must be solved by frankness and good faith among the nations, President Doumer said in his inaugural message read to the Senate and Chamber of Deputies today.

"It cannot be denied," he said, "that the world's economic depression is complicated by these problems. To solve them there must be understanding, frankness and good faith.

"To that work of human salvation France will bring a contribution of common solidarity, studying and discussing at Geneva, with a necessary prudence, all solutions capable of assuring the peace of the world."

Maintenance of peace, the message characterized as "a pressing duty which all peoples have justly imposed upon themselves and to which we were the first to subscribe."

France believes in the League of Nations and is willing to unite with other nations to fight the spread of bolshevism, he said.

RADIO BATTLE OVER A WORD

Washington, June 16 (AP)—Counsel for the Radio Corporation of America argued today that an interpretation of the word "guilty," showed that the radio commission should not revoke the 1409 licenses held by Corporation subsidiaries.

A federal court has held that R. C. A. violated the anti-trust laws through a tube contract.

Hearings began before the commission yesterday to determine whether the court decision made it mandatory upon the commission to refuse to renew licenses.

Louis Titus, counsel for R. C. A. and its subsidiaries, said Section 13 of the radio act directed the commission to "refuse a station license to any person, firm or corporation . . . which has been finally adjudged guilty by a federal court of unlawfully monopolizing or attempting to monopolize radio communication.

The word "guilty," Titus argued, in its legal sense, implies "criminal" guilt.

NAUTILUS CREW RUSH REPAIRS ON ENGINES

Cherbourg, France, June 16 (AP)—Lady Wilkins, wife of the explorer, was kept in her cabin by a temporary indisposition when the Mauretania halted here today but she sent word that she had been in wireless communication with Sir Hubert on the submarine Nautilus on the way across and had learned of the difficulties he had encountered. Lady Wilkins will leave the ship at Southampton.

Aboard the Submarine Nautilus at Sea, June 16—Early today the Nautilus was still on an eight-inch hawser, the U. S. S. Wyoming towing us at the rate of six and one-half knots an hour.

We are headed in the direction of Queenstown, Ireland, but our destination is indefinite, depending on the outcome of our repairs to the motors.

The weather is fair and the seas moderate. Repairs to our motors may be finished within 24 hours.

We worked for five hours yesterday hauling the tow line aboard, only to have it carried away a few minutes after the main hawser reached the Nautilus.

BATTERIES LOW

Sunday, although our starboard engine was useless, we were making fair progress in the heavy seas, through the storm, with only our port engine functioning. Our auxiliary engine, used for "Boosting" our batteries, gave us much trouble. The batteries ran low.

There was no danger while the port engine was running, but our skipper, Capt. Sloan Danenhower, thought it advisable to ask the Shipping Board tanker, "Independence Hall, to reduce her speed to seven knots an hour and stay with us.

The Independence Hall then proceeded. Head seas and a high wind necessitated our battening down all the hatches.

The weather made it impossible to get a line aboard, but when the seas moderated, the Wyoming shot a line across us. We heaved for five hours until darkness came. Then the fastenings parted. The engine had been stopped and it was impossible to start it again as the batteries were practically exhausted.

BUNKS CARRIED AWAY

We drifted thus entirely, entirely uncontrolled. The ship, lurching heavily, carried away the bunks in the quarters of the crew, and loose articles in all compartments crashed from side to side. Cooking was impossible. We ate cold victuals, though we had a small quantity of hot coffee.

The engineers were working all night on the Winton auxiliary engine and finally remedied the trouble, so that it is now again charging our batteries. The crew is getting a little rest before tackling the work on the generator.

Navy Salvage Saves Wilkins Thousands

Washington, July 16 (AP)—Sir Hubert Wilkins and his backers appeared today to have saved several thousand dollars through their good fortune in having two battleships within 60 miles when the polar submarine Nautilus was disabled Sunday.

A charge estimated at $40,000 by salvage experts would have been made by a commercial vessel for towing the Nautilus the 1000 miles to Queenstown, when the navy performs this service it is customary to make no salvage charge.

THE PATH OF FLAME

LIFE STORY OF STARR FAITHFULL

By I. F. LAVEY

Copyright, 1931, by the Boston Evening American. All rights reserved.

CHAPTER FIVE

The hoyden crew with whom she foregathered nightly in the shady side-street haunts of Greenwich Village recognized in Starr the product of a background infinitely above the dross of humanity with which she cast her lot.

Perhaps, in a genuine spirit of sympathy for the recruit to their ranks, they sought by hilarious raillery to destroy the last of the barriers which separated her from them.

BURNS ALL BRIDGES

Whatever the motive, their efforts to reduce the exotic society beauty to their level by a campaign of good-natured ridicule were a sensational success. Goaded by their thrusts at her "prudery" and "mid-Victorianism," Starr burned the last of her bridges behind her, and traveled the road of love—love of the Greenwich Village stamp, as unconventional and transitory as the other emotions in the chaotic lives of her companions in revelry.

The picture of the disintegration of her moral philosophy is not pretty—but it is interesting as a symbol of her renunciation of her old life.

Starr's first experiments with the weird romantic customs of the Village were simply—experiments. There were no "lone wolves" in her new set. Everyone had "attachments."

Starr knew that in the hysteria of Village life lay her only pathway to escape from the morbid mental imageries which tortured her.

PAINTER HER CHOICE

In order to belong one must have an attachment. So, coldly, Starr put away the last of her inhibitions, and chose her man.

He was an Englishman—a penniless, improvident, carefree painter, brilliant, full of promise and hopelessly lazy.

It was the beginning. Starr's attitude in this first affair reflected the utter indifference to love her heterogeneous delving into philosophy had fostered. To her all men were sex crazy. Not yet had come the awakening—the blind, hopeless infatuation which was to grip her—the storm of passion which was to strip her of her pride, and to send her repeatedly across the sea in unashamed pursuit of the indifferent object of her mad love.

One thing she kept inviolate—her home.

Night after night, exhausted, stupefied with liquor, but triumphant over the demons of unrest, she returned—alone—to the cloistered atmosphere which, without the safety-valve of the Village, would have been unbearable.

Their daughter, Starr's parents told their friends, had little interest in the companionship of her own generation. She spent her evenings, they thought, in study.

In study!

This of the bacchante—this of the disciple of "freedom"—this of the exotic beauty whose Jekyll-and-Hyde existence was thrusting her ever close to the brink of the precipice.

(The story of the double life and tragic death of Starr Faithfull continues in tomorrow's Boston Evening American.)

U. S. WOMAN IS BUDDHIST NUN

San Francisco, June 16 (AP)—To the chant of Japanese monks, Mrs. Margaret E. Ladson, 32, a divorcee, has forsaken her 14-year-old son, her country and all her possessions to become a Buddhist nun.

Today she is the only California woman—perhaps the only American woman—to be ordained as such.

Soon she will leave for Japan to have her head shaved, don the coarse clothes of a novice and enter a nunnery. After two years she plans to return to America to aid in spreading Buddhism.

Mrs. Ladson was ordained by her teacher, the Rev. Nyogen Senkei, who founded Zen temple here four years ago.

GUNMEN HOLD UP 2 AT LOWELL

Lowell, June 16 (AP)—Three robbers, one of whom was armed, took $36 from Reginald Boutsy of Hudson, N. Y., early today and 15 minutes later robbed Peter Georges of Lowell of $12.

Bouley, who had attended a dance here with Miss Beatrice Jelley of 14 Olive st., Nashua, was driving homeward at about 3:30 a. m. when a car stopped in front of him. One man held a pistol to Bouley's head while another emptied his pockets. One of the trio disabled the ignition system of his car.

Georges was starting his automobile as three men, answering the description of the men who held up Bouley, robbed him at pistol point and disabled the ignition system of his automobile.

HOOVER FLAYS 'BETRAYERS' OF HARDING

pliffers to throw the voices to the outer edge of the crowd.

When former President Coolidge and Mrs. Coolidge arrived, the crowd at the station was so great that soldiers were needed to get them safely to their automobiles.

Floral pieces, resting at the head of the graves, included wreaths from the Ohio General Assembly, the Kiwanis International, Rotary, the Marion Legion, the G. A. R. and allied organizations, and others.

The President's allusion to those who betrayed Mr. Harding came near the close of his brief address and caused a profound hush to fall over the assembly.

With very evident feeling, he told how he had been one of those who accompanied President Harding on the ill-fated Alaskan trip that ended in his death; how he had observed him slipping physically and growing more weary under the burdens imposed upon him.

"And we came also to know," said Mr. Hoover, "that here was a man whose soul was being scarred by a great disillusionment. We saw him gradually weaken, not only from physical exhaustion but from mental anxiety.

"Warren Harding had a dim realization that he had been betrayed by a few of the men whom he had trusted, by men whom he had believed were his devoted friends.

"It was later proved in the courts of the land that these men had betrayed and alone betrayed friendship and trust of their staunch and loyal friend, but they had betrayed their country.

"That was the tragedy in the life of Warren Harding."

Then, with great deliberation and intense feeling, Mr. Hoover proceeded to blister with burning words those who prove false to a public trust.

FLAYS "BETRAYERS"

"There are," he said, "disloyalties and there are crimes which shock the sensibilities, which may bring suffering upon those who are touched by their immediate results. But there is no disloyalty and no crime in all the category of human weaknesses which compares with the failure of probity in the conduct of public trust.

"Monetary loss or even the shock to moral sensibilities is, perhaps, a passing thing, but the breaking down of the faith of a people in the honesty of their government and in the integrity of their institutions, the lowering of respect for the standards of honor which prevail in high places, are crimes for which punishment can never atone."

It was a speech such as the loyal Marion home-folk have long waited to hear, and the deep hush was punctuated by a murmur of approval that rippled to the far reaches of the throng.

There were many on the platform and in the assemblage who knew and loved Warren Harding throughout a lifetime in a small city, long before even in his ever dreamed of the White House. The years that followed his death were tragic ones to them as investigation and litigation unrolled unsavory episodes at Washington. And to these men, loyal friends and neighbors and cronies, the reassuring words of Mr. Hoover and of Mr. Coolidge were as music.

Probably few Presidents have been extolled for their personal qualities as was Harding today. His kindness, his simplicity, his loyalty, and his amiability were dwelt upon at length by both President Hoover and ex-President Coolidge.

"MAN OF THE HOUR"

"He was a mind and character fitted for a task where the one transcendent need was the healing quality of gentleness and friendliness," said Mr. Hoover. "He was a man of delicate sense of honor, of sympathetic heart of transcendent gentleness of soul—who reached out for friendship, who gave of it loyally and generously in his every thought and deed."

There is scant doubt, Mr. Coolidge observed, that time and circumstance required a man of Harding's type when he went to the White House. The country, he pointed out, was still technically at war and disturbed and distraught.

"He had experience and ability, courage and patience, combined with a generous toleration and cheerful optimism that inspired confidence. He understood the people and the people understood him.

"In composing a situation, in pacifying men, he was a master."

The former President dwelt at considerable length on the legislative accomplishments of the Harding administration. He pointed out that in the short span of two years after Harding's induction into office there had been accomplished really a prodigious amount of constructive government effort—the making of peace with the central powers, enactment of a new tariff law, immigration restricted, a budget bureau established, the war veterans cared for through establishment of the Veterans' Bureau, taxes reduced, the shipping business and railroad operation liquidated, government finances put on a firm foundation, and, finally, naval competition was halted through President Harding's calling the first Washington naval conference.

HIS WORTHY DEEDS

"Such in barest outline," Mr. Coolidge continued, "are some of the policies adopted under the leadership of President Harding for the restoration of the United States and the pacification of the world. It would be difficult to find any peace-time period of a little over two years ago when so much that was beneficial was accomplished as during his administration."

It was Mr. Coolidge who acted as master of ceremonies at today's exercises. He is honorary president of the Harding Memorial Association, which was formed within a few weeks after the death of President Harding in August, 1923. Most of the work in connection with the memorial has been accomplished by home-town friends of the dead President.

The program itself was comparatively brief. After an invocation by Fr. William J. Spickerman, pastor of St. Mary's Catholic Church in Marion, ex-Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey briefly recited the history of the association and the memorial. This was followed by music by the Columbus Glee Club, a favorite of Harding's, which was much featured during the famous front-porch campaign in Marion in 1920.

Former President Coolidge then took charge and after his address introduced President Hoover and Governor George White.

The exercises closed with the glee club's rendition of the "End of a Perfect Day," which was Mrs. Harding's favorite song, and an invocation by Dr. Jesse Swank, pastor of the Central Methodist Church of Springfield, O.

President Hoover's final act in Marion was to lay a wreath on the tomb of the dead President. Then he departed for Columbus to review the G. A. R. parade.

In Marion, Ohio, today, President Hoover unveiled the Warren G. Harding memorial. The marble tomb which holds the bodies of both President Harding and his wife were officially named as the nation listened on radio. GERARD BACKS HEARST PLAN

New York, June 16—The William Randolph Hearst plan to stabilize wages in return of prosperity through a $5,000,000,000 government appropriation will be seriously considered in a great industrial congress.

This was forecast today by James W. Gerard, former ambassador to Germany, and now chairman of the commission on industrial inquiry of the National Civic Federation.

The congress was proposed by Matthew Woll, acting president of the Civic Federation and vice-president of the American Federation of Labor. Concerning the Hearst plan, Mr. Gerard said:

"Mr. Hearst is usually very sound in his views on economic subjects. The Hearst plan might well be used, at least to tide us over the immediate future."

CARDINAL GETS OUT OF SPAIN

Vatican City, June 16 (AP)—Pope Pius has instructed the papal nuncio at Madrid to file a protest with the Spanish government against expulsion of Cardinal Segura.

Madrid, June 16 (AP)—Cardinal Pedro Segura y Saenz, expelled from Spain, crossed the frontier at San Sebastian today and drove to Hendaye, France, in his own car.

He was accompanied to the border by his brother and Police Commissioner Maqueda in one car and by four detectives in another. He bade farewell to his companions without making a statement.

His enforced journey across Spain was marked by manifestations against him in San Sebastian and Guadalajara which led authorities to take extraordinary precautions for his safety. His departure was slightly delayed at Aranda De Duero, where he became slightly ill and was forced to stop for medicine.

A mob collected in the main streets of San Sebastian last night and announced its intention of intercepting the cardinal's car. Authorities telephoned Madrid to delay his arrival until after midnight and placed reinforcements of guards on patrol to avert disorder.

Maniac Slain After Having Shot Woman

Philadelphia, June 16 (AP)—Police sought today to identify a maniac killed in a running gunfight with a park guard after threatening men and women with a revolver and wounding one married woman in Fairmount pk. last night. The man's body, with a bullet in his head, was found in shrubbery after he had shot Mrs. Anna Kulch, 33, in the back as she and her husband sat on a bench.

Cooking a Dish of Tourists

—By Arthur "Bugs" Baer—

Tex Guinan has new idea of touring. She touches Europe and jumps away quick.

Following an old Prairie custom our tourists are now roaming Europe in vast herds, grazing in the daytime and huddling together at night for warmth.

The new expeditionary force to visit over there will be the substitutes and proxies of the Wickersham commish. They will sing the marching song of the stationary engineers, refuse to drink toasts out of the saucer and make speeches at acute angles.

WITNESSES FAIL TO APPEAR

Lowell, June 16—In spite of capiases issues a week ago, two women witnesses failed to appear in probate court today as ordered for the hearing on a conservator for Ray F. Webster, wealthy proprietor of chain drug stores.

The conservator for Webster is sought by his wife under a "spendthrift trust."

Miss Bessie Rogers, a former bookkeeper, and Miss Yvonne Labbe, a friend, are the women sought. Deputy sheriffs reported they were unable to serve the capiases during the week's lull in the hearing.

Mrs. Webster was cross-exained again today on the system of bookkeeping in her husband's store. She admitted that she one time took $150 from a till for a trip to New York.

Under re-direct examination by her own counsel she said the money was taken with the permission of her husband.

VATICAN CLUB VICTORY DUE TO KING

Rome, June 16 (AP)—King Victor Emmanuel is widely accredited by the Italian people for the government order permitting reopening of Catholic laymen's clubs, recently closed by the police.

Cardinal Pacelli, papal secretary of state, saw the king personally, it is said, and induced him to make representations to Premier Mussolini that since 95 per cent of the Italian people is Catholic, group activities should be permitted.

His Majesty and the Pope were signatories of the Lateran treaty, premier and Cardinal Gasparri signed the original draft, but the king and the pontiff signed the ratification.

Reopening of thousands of Catholic clubs continued today throughout Italy and provincial police presents have been notified by the church authorities that all clubs may resume operations with the strict understanding they shall be directed by the diocesan bishops instead of by their lay presidents.

the police, that changes the story, and makes it difficult.

Russia decrees that all defective children, the deaf, blind, mute, crippled or mentally feeble, must be educated. The order for their education emphasizes a difference between Russia and this country, much in our favor.

Here, to a certain extent, we take care of the deaf, the mute, the blind, the mentally weak, and we do it for the sake of the children that we try to help.

The Russian decree announces that the defective children must be educated and "made useful to the state." First comes the state and what it needs; second come the unfortunate children.

FATHER FAILS IN HUNT FOR TWO CHILDREN

Newburyport, June 16—Failing in his search here for his two children, 7 and 9 years, kidnaped from their home in Brooklyn last October, Philip Siraguza left town today for New York to obtain more funds to continue his quest.

Siraguza spent what little money he had to come here to look for his missing children. He says they appeared in a photograph of a circus parade here, in which "Bessy" Gillis rode an elephant. He saw the photograph in a New York newspaper. He declared that the arm of a girl, torn from its socket, found on Ipswich beach last Saturday, is not that of either of his daughters. The medical examiner says the arm is that of a girl about 13.

He declared he would "beat" his way back to Brooklyn.

"I'll be back in about three weeks," he said, "and I will find my children. My wife is ill over their absence."

BOSTON MAN PAYS $50,000 IN FRAMEUP

BY THE MASKED REPORTER

Copyright, 1931, by the Boston Evening American. All Rights Reserved.

The blackmail racket, like many others, has been made easier since prohibition, I am told, with the result that men are victimized today who in the old days would never have been endangered.

This man likes good time but is smart enough to realize that he and his kind are not safe if they mingle in the night life of a big city.

So he attended only such parties as were given by friends or acquaintances whom he was confident were all right.

What he failed to understand was the fact that the racketeer and his woman go everywhere today.

HIGH HAT CROOKS

Consequently, in one guise or another he is usually on hand at parties, and it is practically impossible for the uninformed to spot him.

The business man to whom I have referred, learned this to his cost, according to my information.

One night he attended a party given at a more or less exclusive country club in the suburbs of Boston. He knew the crowd who were giving it and was acquainted with many of the guests. However, as it is fashionable nowadays to be cosmopolitan, there was a sprinkling of theatrical people present, together with one or two writers, and certain others whose status was not clearly defined.

It was a good party with plenty to drink, a splendid orchestra for dancing and all kinds of partners. The business man's wife doesn't care for that sort of thing, and he had gone alone. During the evening he was attracted to a vivacious platinum blonde.

FALLS FOR BLONDE

She was accompanied by an entertaining young man, an earnest drinker with a ready wit, who made himself popular with everyone.

The blonde proved to be of the "understanding" type so much sought by tired business men, and under the influence of a good many drinks the prospective victim formed a strong affection for her.

From there it was only a short step to paying all her expenses, and her benefactor insisted she should have a better apartment together with a maid. The new apartment proved to be a very nice love nest and the business man celebrated with a champagne dinner.

In the meantime the racketeers had looked him up. They found that his business was one of the largest in the city.

TRAP IS SPRUNG

The gang were elated and decided to "put on the shake for plenty."

Acting under instructions, the girl left her outer door unlocked. When the time was ripe she hung a towel from a bathroom window which was visible to a watcher stationed nearby. No sooner had the white signal appeared than he raced to a telephone and gave the word.

A short time later an automobile containing three men drew up a few doors from the apartment house.

Picture her benefactor's astonishment when three strange men walked into the room and demanded his name. Then they informed him they were detectives employed by the young woman's husband to obtain divorce evidence.

The business man realized his predicament and asked if a settlement could not be made. He was advised to see a certain man, and did so the next day. It cost him $50,000—but perhaps it was worth it. I understand he has developed a strong aversion to blondes, particularly the platinum type.

More revelations by The Masked Reporter will be made tomorrow.

Gold Solution Used in New Infantile Paralysis Test

Pasadena, Cal., June 16 (AP)—Gold was reported as a new medical weapon against infantile paralysis by Dr. Frederick Eberson and Dr. William G. Maxman of San Francisco to the American Association for the Advancement of Science today.

They revealed a method of measuring the amount of immunity substances in the blood stream by which infantile paralysis carriers can be detected. To a small quantity of the blood stream is added a solution of gold preparation.

In a positive test showing the protective properties in the serum the gold solution is changed in color and a bluish or violet sediment appears in a clear solution. A negative test, showing no protective substances in the serum, leaves the gold solution unchanged.

Mexicans Protest Law to Limit Priests

Mexico City, June 16 (AP)—A proposed law which would limit the number of Catholic priests in the State of Vera Cruz to one for every 100,000 population, was the object of growing opposition on the part of Catholics today.

The bill has passed the first reading in the Vera Cruz Legislature and was due for a second hearing today.

FLIER SEES 100 BODIES IN SEA

St. Nazaire, France, June 16 (AP)—About 100 bodies from the sunken excursion steamer St. Philibert were sighted this morning floating among the wreckage near the mouth of the Loire river. They were discovered by the pilot of a hydro-airplane and tugs put off at once with divers to recover them.

Eight army trucks started for Nantes on a 36-mile ride with the bodies of 70 persons fished out of the Bay of Biscay yesterday.

It was decided to open the coffins in Nantes today so that the bereaved could claim their beloved remains.

The castle of the Dukes of Brittany, of which the Breton people are so proud, was transformed overnight into a funeral chapel, where the bodies of the victims will rest until they are transported to their native cities. Of the 70 bodies recovered 61 were women, one was a boy of about 14 and two were men, who were identified.

Patrolman Retires

Patrolman John J. Maguire of the Brighton station was retired from the police department at roll call today after serving on the force for 34 years.

COOK AT SUMMER HOME

Secretary of State Frederic W. Cook is spending the summer at Plymouth. The secretary commutes to and from Boston.

LONG'S SPACE IS SHORT

Despite the transfer of departments from the State House to the Metropolitan district building, the need of additional room is still urgent. To take care of the overflow of files from his office alone, Tax Commissioner Henry F. Long is using the corridors.

ELY CAREFUL DRIVER

Governor Ely frequently takes the wheel of the car on his weekend trips to his home in Westfield. In this way he finds relaxation. He is an unusually careful driver and dislikes speed. Probably no driver on the road is more heedful of the motor traffic rules. And he insists that his chauffeur also shall take no liberties.

SHIELDS STILL PLACING MEN

Director John J. Shields of the municipal employment bureau is taking a more optimistic view of things these days. Yesterday he placed 40 "white collar" men at work as salesmen in a new store in Hyde Park. He was smiling when he appeared for work today and predicted that there will be more "breaks" like that for Boston men soon.

NEW BUILDING SOUGHT

City Councilor Israel Ruby of Ward 14, Dorchester, is now campaigning for the erection of a new municipal building at Franklin field.

DR. McCARTHY IS GOOD

John J. "Broadway" Sullivan, hero of the Pickwick Club disaster, who was nearly fatally injured in a building collapse in South Boston two months ago, was in City Hall yesterday singing the praises of Dr. "Larry" McCarthy of the fourth surgical service at the City Hospital. John says that surgeons had decided that his left foot could have to be amputated when Dr. McCarthy took charge of the case and after hours of labor saved the leg.

GLYNN GETS CLUB

Former Fire Commissioner Theodore A. Glynn was presented with one of the much sought after blackthorn sticks by Mayor Curley yesterday.

BOSTON'S REPRESENTATIVE

Miss Elizabeth Herlihy, secretary of the Boston planning board in City Hall, will attend the 23d national conference on city planning in Rochester, N. Y., during the period of June 22-24. She was delegated by Mayor Curley to represent Boston.

LUPE VELEZ AND GARY COOPER TO HEAD CAST IN FILM SOON

"Broken Wings" Will Be Vehicle for Favorites' First as Co-Stars

By HARRIET PARSONS
Universal Service Motion Picture Editor
Copyright, 1931, by Universal Service, Inc.

LOS ANGELES, June 16—Here's something that'll whet your appetites. Even if it falls through it's a good story! Lupe and Gary (Velez and Cooper in case you've been vacationing in Siberia) are going to do a picture together when the latter returns from his holiday.

Harriet Parsons

The title is "Broken Wings," and Dolores Del Rio was originally slated to play opposite Gary. But Dolores is tied up and the chances are that Lupe will take her place. Remember how mad little Velez used to get when anyone told her she looked like Del Rio? Ah, well—have you had your irony today?

At present Gary's in England and Lupe is still on tour in vaudeville.

PARAMOUNT SWITCHES actors around so fast they must wonder who they are. They switched Peggy Shannon into Clara Bow's place in "The Secret Call," and sent Sylvia Sidney instead of Nancy Carroll to United Artists for "Street Scene." Paul Lukas gets switched around so much he must feel like a freight train. And now comes the word that Richard Arlen will replace Phillips Holmes in "No One Man." Carole Lombard and Gene Raymond also in the cast, and Lothar Mendes directing. Hope they don't try putting Bobby Coogan in a Marlene Dietrich role.

Seth Parker Starts Film Career

SETH PARKER, psalm-singing radio star, is going to start his picture career by minding "Other People's Business." At least that is the title they have given the original story Jane Murfin is writing for Seth, whose home-town name is Phillips Lord. Lynn Shores will direct. Radio Pictures has lived up to its name by signing more broadcasting personalities than any other company. Which reminds me—wonder if the Amos 'n' Andy talkie contract really is all off?

HEARD AND OVERHEARD about town: E. H. Griffith still pleading with RKO-Pathe to buy Barrie's "What Every Woman Knows." E. H. thinks it would make a grand talkie with Frances Starr in the Maude Adams role. RKO thinks otherwise. Maybe they've forgotten that it was Griffith who held out for Ina Claire in "Rebound." Marie Dressler, giving an old-home week luncheon for Georgia Caine and Ethel Levey. Marie's had a lot of illness of late, but when I inquired solicitously after her health, she bellowed:

"Great." Then she added, "I got so doggone tired of saying 'not so well, thank you,' that now when anybody asks me how I feel I yell 'fine' loud enough to knock their eyeballs out if they look doubting. It works, too. I'm feeling much better lately!"

Mary Carr, who has been having tough breaks for a long time, telling her friends she will be in the next Laurel and Hardy comedy.

WELL, JACK OAKIE'S business difficulties are clearing up but his troubles of the heart seem to grow more complicated every day. Jack has been paying commission to four or five agents and squabbling with Paramount at the same time. But all that is settled now and this week will see Jack's contract difficulties straightened out. Which leaves him free to concentrate on his romance with Mary Brian. But, alas, alas! Mary seems to be casting an admiring eye on Russell Gleason, who plays opposite her in "The Homicide Squad." Remember, Jack, a boy's best friend is his mother.

SPEAKING OF Radio Dorothy Lee leads another dramatic role when she finishes "Should Wives Work." She will emote in "Lady Luck," a story by Keene Thompson. Heavy drama seems to be Radio's newest racket for Dorothy. For awhile promised stardom was the big racket. But nothing came of that. Just the old bundle of hay dangled in front of the horse's nose to make him run.

Exeter Theater

Edwina Booth in "Trader Horn" and Laurel and Hardy in "Another Fine Mess" are the attractions for today and tomorrow at the Exeter. The last half of the week Conrad Nagel and Zasu Pitts will be seen in "Bad Sister." Wallace Beery in "The Secret Six" will also be shown.

FAVORITES OF FILMLAND GRACE BOSTON SCREENS

Screen Shorts

Marie Dressler will be starred in a story written especially for her by Frances Marion when she starts work in the near future on "Emma." Miss Marion is the author of "Min and Bill," and also wrote the scripts of "The Secret Six" and "The Big House." "Emma" is said to afford more opportunity for unusual characterization than any of Miss Dressler's earlier roles.

Edgar Rice Burroughs, author of "Tarzan of the Apes" and its various sequels of African adventure, as well as many other novels bordering on the weird and fantastic, has been commissioned to prepare an original script woven about the character of Tarzan.

Odd jewelry is often affected by screen favorites. For instance, Hedda Hopper boasts what looks like a seal for sealing letters, which, at a flick of the hand, turns into a watch. Buster Keaton has a cigarette lighter that has a watch concealed within it that can strike the hour.

Clark Gable has an odd way of relaxing between pictures. He does repair work on his auto. Gable loves machinery and is more expert than the average garage mechanic. Buster Keaton, the comedian, is another who plays with mechanics as a hobby.

Karem Morley, comely leading lady, is undecided whether to take up aviation or not. For the past few week-ends the blond actress has been soaring around in the clouds with an aviator friend trying to find out just what is what in the air.

Midnight Show at the Met

Presenting a preview of Janet Gaynor and Warner Baxter in "Daddy Long Legs," the Metropolitan will have a Midnight Show tonight beginning promptly at midnight. The showing is in the nature of a Bunker Hill Day celebration.

"Daddy Long Legs" is said to far surpass in beauty and excellence of direction any picture of recent months. It is based, of course, upon the old favorite and stage success of the same name and is a picture for the entire family. It also is the medium of bringing again to the talking screen Janet Gaynor, twice selected as the "queen of the screen" in national contests. There will also be sound news, a comedy, Arthur Martel in "Headlines," a parody on current news events, and other attractions.

"Daddy Long Legs" begins its regular run at the Metropolitan next Thursday at which time Nan Halperin also appears in person.

Joan Crawford Film at Orpheum Friday

Joan Crawford's "Laughing Sinners," screen version of "The Torch Song," comes to the Loew's Orpheum screen Friday. Bert Walton, who dubs himself "La Ranconteur Distingue," will headline the vaudeville bill in a versatile comedy hodgepodge. Corinne Tilton, in "A Cycle of Song Studies," will be another feature. "Any Family," a domestic comedy sketch of American life, by Harry Delf, satirizing the foibles of family life, is another act. Joe Neimeyer and Doris Walker in a modernistic revue, "Drifting High," with The Mayfair Sextette," are also included.

Publix Officials Wed After Romance Born in Theater

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

Boston has its motion picture romances, true life material, the equal of that which comes out of Hollywood. For instance, there's the romance of Jack Saef of the Metropolitan's staff, and Ann Eisenberg of the Uptown. Two years ago, when himself connected with the Back Bay house, Jack hired Ann, and now he confesses he fell in love with her at first sight. Today they are away on their honeymoon, the happy ending being consummated with all the colored dash and appeal of the best made-in-the-studio product.

The girl quickly made good at the Uptown, and in time rose to be secretary to the manager, Albert E. Fowler, Jr., one of the peppiest executives in Publix. Jack Saef was promoted to the Met's publicity and exploitation staff as assistant to Floyd Bell, who knows all the p's and q's of his profession. His side continued his wooing of the attractive young lady at the Uptown and in due course the banns were published in the synagogue. The wedding, a mid-June event, was held in Wellington Auditorium, and was attended by many folk from Boston film circles. It was done with all the beauty and detail of the Hebrew rites, with rare excellence of chanting by the cantor, and of singing by Barney Waldman.

In the festivities following the ceremony, the couple were showered with gifts, including many envelopes containing gold pieces, which made the bridegroom remark that it looked as if the romance were a "wow" for the box-office to bring in so many shekels. It seems to be a good old Jewish custom to hand the bridal pair silver in household goods, and then to add presents of gold coin to help them more. Still another custom, in which the writer of this shared, much to his pleasure, was when everybody present kissed the fair bride. On his side, it must be said that the groom broke all records for one evening's osculation—at least 1001 ladies kissed him!

The Metropolitan sent the largest picture house delegation, including Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Bell, Miss Angeline Maney, and Joseph Marquis, who was recently promoted from Met manager of the Egyptian. Miss Florence Gordon, as pretty as any motion picture star you ever saw, represented Edward A. Zorn, Publix Boston manager. Mr. and Mrs. Fowler and Mr. and Mrs. Leo Goodman represented the Uptown. Many others came from ranks of exhibitors, and from the exchanges.

Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. A. Spillberg, who on the same day celebrated their twelfth wedding anniversary; Mr. and Mrs. Daniel S. Ruben, whose sixth wedding anniversary it was; Miss Minnie Meltzer, Miss Belle Eisenberg, sister of the bride and also connected with the Uptown; Mr. and Mrs. Saul Saef of Paterson, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Portnoy, and Mr. and Mrs. Morris Olervitz of New York city; Jacob Saef, Talmud scholar; Mrs. S. Bloomberg of Miami, Fla.; Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Weinstein of Brockton. James A. Canton was master of ceremonies.

Cablegrams came from Europe, and telegraph messages were received from many states.

Jack Saef is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Leon Saef of 590 Cummings highway, Mattapan, and the bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Eisenberg, of 31 Hiawatha rd., Mattapan. The couple are now on a trip to Bermuda.

Film Who's Who

Ben Lyon, who has one of the two leading male roles in Gloria Swanson's new picture, "Indiscreet," at Loew's State, next Friday, was born in Atlanta, Ga. He was educated at the Park School, Baltimore, where his family moved when he was four years old. He was sent to New York to finish his education, but was sidetracked into a screen career when he secured a job at the Famous Players Studio as an extra. After a year he went on the stage in Booth Tarkington's "Seventeen," and subsequently played opposite Jeanne Eagels in "The Wonderful Thing." His first important picture role was in "The Heart of Maryland."

Work Begun on the New 'Scandals'

Back in town again after a brief trip to Europe, where he went on a moment's impulse, Maestro George White now is hard at work on his new "Scandals," and announces proudly that he has signed up Willie Howard and his brother, Eugene.

This is good news for everybody, but Mr. White is not stopping there. He says that he expects to complete his cast for the revue, the 11th in the series by the way, within the next week. According to present plans, he will bring the "Scandals" to town late in July.

The revue business being distinctly on the up, what with two hits like "The Third Little Show," and "Band Wagon," White has something to shoot at. He shows no signs, however, of going into a nervous relapse.

Besides 70 typical Ziegfeld girls, the cast includes Harry Richman, Helen Morgan, Ruth Etting, Gladys Glad, Jack Pearl, Viola Tree, Ethel Borden, Hal LeRoy, Albert Carroll, Pearl Osgood, Frank and Milt Britton and Gang, Mitzi Mayfair, Faith Bacon, Frank McCormack, John Daley Murphy, Collette Sisters, Cliff Hall, Buck and Bubbles, Milton LeRoy, Reri, eight Albertina Rasch solo dancers, and 22 male soloists.

Gala Holiday Bill at Paragon Park Tonight

Paragon Park at Nantasket Beach tonight will be open all night for the June 17th celebration. A big display of fireworks, special amusements and their new roller skating rink will be going full blast to make this year's fete notable. The Nantasket Beach Steamboat Company will have excursion rates at half-fare to Nantasket Beach tomorrow.

Bob Hall Hit as Scollay Headliner

Bob Hall, familiar to theatergoers in Boston, scores a triumph this week at the Scollay, where he is dispensing extemporaneous rhymes in his entertaining fashion. His keen, brilliant wit is amazing to those who have watched him in the past, he appears to be better than ever. Opening the seven-act bill are Japanese doing difficult bicycle tricks. Comedy and singing are featured by McGrath and Deeds, who go over well. McCarthy and Stennard have a comedy treat. Next come "Three Jolly Tars," who stop the show with their crazy clowning and fine dancing.

Bob Hall

A pretentious song and dance revue called "Dance Personalities" displays beautiful and intricate dance steps. This is followed by Bob Hall, appropriately named "The Sunshine Boy," as he keeps the audience in gales of laughter. Closing the show are Joe and Ida St. Onge, who live up to their reputation of daring.

Theatrical Association Holds Reunion Tonight

GIRL AIDE POSES AS STRANGLING VICTIM

two demonstrations by Dr. Emius D. Peaseley, government medical witness, of the stranglers clutch that the state claims killed Verna.

Once for the government and once again for the playboy's defence counsel she loaned her graceful neck and throat for enactment of the strangler's clutch by the large right hand of the Truesdale Hospital pathologist.

PLAYBOY UNMOVED

The jury trooped down from the jury box and grouped about the pair.

Hathaway, hands clasped over one knee, watched the proceedings intently, absolutely devoid of any surface display of emotion.

Carl E. Russell of Portsmouth, Verna's father, watched with hands folded under his chin and if he visualized his daughter in Miss Edin's place, he gave no sign.

Dr. James W. Holt, Fall River dentist had testified that the bridge knocked from Verna's mouth on the night she met death might have been dislodged from a force applied from outside or inside the mouth.

Atty. Gen. Benjamin M. McLyman then called Joseph Eugene Roy, an employe of the kitchen at the Truesdale Hospital.

"I met Mr. Hathaway on Wednesday night, March 18," Roy testified in a halting, hardly audible voice.

"Him and I got talking together. He told me he was going to a card game and that he was lonesome because his girl friend had left town and he said he'd like to meet Miss Russell."

"DATE" ARRANGED

Roy said that on a day following he sent a message to Verna by Miss Nora McCaughery, head waitress at the hospital.

"What did the note say?" Atty.-Gen. McLyman asked.

"'Pinky' Hathaway would like to call you up some time," Roy answered.

It was the first time Hathaway's nickname has been used since the start of the trial a week ago yesterday.

Roy saidananswer came back that it would be al right for 'Pinky' to call Verna up. He said he received a call from Hathaway on Thursday, March 19 and he told him it was all right, to go ahead and call Verna up.

He later saw him in Cherry st. and Hathaway told him, "Thanks, O .K., Gene."

Roy was not cross-examined.

The state called Nora McCaughery, and the case moved with esurprising swiftness compared to the delay during the demical testimony.

Miss McCaughery, a plum, attractive young woman, testified that she carried first a verbal message and then a written one to Verna in the diningroom of the nurses' home at the request of Roy. She, too, was excused without cross-examination.

"PINKY" CALLED

Clara N. Whiting house-mother at the nurses' home, took the stand.

She knew Verna, she said, and Verna had a caller on the evening of March 23.

"Who called?" McLyman asked.

"Elliott R. Hathaway," she said.

The time was about 7:40 p. m. She said she knew Hathaway. Verna left about quarter of eight.

"Elliott R. Hathaway," she said again.

She was asked if she saw him in the room. . I do." she said. Hathaway was requested to stand. He did so, a half-smile twisting his lips.

"Is this the man who called for Verna Russell and left with her?" the prosecutor asked.

"It is," said the witness.

John Skammels of Highland ave., Fall River, questioned by Asst. Atty.-Gen. Sigmund W. Fischer, Jr., said he was standing outside the Highland pharmacy on March 23 with Richard Hennessy, Thomas Keefe and Raymond Sheehan.

PLACED AT STORE

He was asked if he knew Hathaway. He smiled and answered "Yes," indicating him.

He said Hathaway drove up to thep harmacq between 10 minutes of 8 and 10 minutes past on the murder night. There was a woman in dark clothes in the car with him, hes aid.

He testified that Hathaway entered thed rug store, came out later, got in the car and drove off east after speaking to Hennessey.

Once for the government and once again for the defense Miss Edin loaned her graceful neck and throat for re-enactment of the strangler's clutch by Dr. Peasley's large right hand in a husher courtroom jammed with spectators.

The demonstration of the strangler's hold on a girl of about Verna's own age was the dramatic highlight of the trial to date.

It was during redirect examination that Atty.-Gen. Benjamin M. McLyman suggested that Miss Edin lend herself as subject for the demonstration.

Her figure, somewhat slighter than that of the dead girl whose role she assumed, was clad in a green figured dress with patent leather belt. She has unbobbed, chestnut blonde hair.

HANDS OF DEATH

The jurymen craned their necks. Foreman Fish, wearing a daisy, learned far forward in his seat, his elbow on the rail box.

"Here's the clavicle. Here's the angle of the jaw," said Dr. Peasley, demonstrating. He placed thumbs and forefingers at Miss Edin's throat, as he testified he had placed them on marks found on Verna's throat.

"I can feel the pulsation in the veins of the neck," said Dr. Peasley.

The government's demonstration ended, Atty.-Gen. McLyman asked the young pathologist whether, in his opinion, anything but asphyxia by strangulation could have caused death.

"There was no other cause possible," was his reply.

Hurley then asked for the loan of Miss Edin's neck for another demonstration. She graciously assented.

She and Peasley again resumed their places and Dr. Peasley's hand went to her throat. He was asked by Hurley to place his thumb and fingers in the position he had put them on Miss Russell's neck when he fitted them over the marks.

"Does your third finger touch your second?" Hurley asked.

"Occasionally, as I move it around," Dr. Peasley responded.

"Well, hold it still and tell me."

"Just now it doesn't," said the doctor. Hurley then stressed a point which several times, in cross-examination, he had laid emphasis upon.

"The web of your hand does not come up to Miss Edin's neck, does it?" he said in a raised tone.

"It doesn't on this particular neck," the doctor replied.

Hurley asked the court's permission for the jury to leave the box and move closer so that all might see the position of the hand. This was granted by Judge Walsh.

JURORS CALLED

Said the chief defense counsel: "I ask the jurors to note the distance of the web of the hand from the throat and the statement of the witness that this is a natural position."

The jurors made a close inspection and resumed their seats.

The defence, by question suggesting that Verna strangled on some foreign object in her throat, drew from Dr. Peasley the admission that it might be possible for a small object to lodge in the windpipe or be drawn into the lungs.

Dr. Holt, who constructed the two-tooth bridge knocked from the victim's throat on the night she met death, identified the bridge itself and the fragment of tooth found in the throat at exhumation as his work.

Hathaway Planning Surprise Defense

By DOROTHY ROE

Newport, R. I., June 16 (US)—Elliott R. Hathaway, bored young son of the jazz age, will tell a strange story when he takes the stand in his own defense against the charge that he strangled pretty Verna Russell in a lonely lane on the night of March 23, according to his brother, Dr. Louis E. Hathaway, Jr.:

"My brother never killed anybody," said Dr. Hathaway. "He isn't a bad boy—he's just fond of good times, like any other young fellow.

"This was his first date with Verna Russell. They were introduced over the telephone, and he met her for the first time when he called at the Truesdale Hospital that evening.

"He has his own story to tell—and it is one that will surprise everybody concerned. He can prove that he didn't kill the girl. But he's waiting until the time comes to talk."

Vernon Galvin, star witness for the state and boyhood friend of Hathaway, is to take the stand.

A Gentle Hint to A College Dean

This is the season when honorary degrees are bestowed on prominent leaders in finance and business in recognition of their services to mankind. Will Rogers, the humorist, recently declined to accept any honorary degree except "A.D.," which he defined as "Doctor of Applesauce," but if some genial institution of learning wishes to confer an honorary degree upon Boston Ice, we would modestly suggest the degree "T.Q.D.," or "Doctor of Thirst Quenching." For Boston Ice has been performing this healthful and kindly service for hundreds of thousands of men and women, in every walk of life, for many years.

THEODORA WINSLOW SELECTS HER ATTENDANTS

AT PICTURESQUE BELMONT-SALTONSTALL WEDDING

HUNTWICKE, THE CHARMING COUNTRY HOME OF John L. Saltonstall in Topsfield, was the scene of the reception for the wedding guests of Miss Betsy Saltonstall and August Belmont, when they returned from the little English stone church in Hamilton where they were united in marriage.

In spite of the prominence of both families, it was a simple country wedding. Miss Betsy gowned in a flounced mousseline de soie with no train, instead of the traditional bridal satin gown en traine, and her attendants frocked in dotted swiss muslins with simple colored ruchings. Their bouquets were of daisies. The bride carried a bunch of white roses tied with white satin ribbon. Her tulle veil scarcely touched the hem of her dress.

About a hundred guests were invited to the ceremony, many of them out-of-town and New Yorkers, relatives of the bridegroom. Interest was centered upon Mrs. Henry K. Billings, the bride's mother, who walked across the lawn to greet her daughter on her wedding day. She made a very pretty picture with the wind blowing her yellow chiffon gown and large blue hat, smiling to her friends and wishing much happiness to Miss Betsy. Mr. Billings accompanied her. They stayed through the ceremony but, naturally, did not go on to Huntwicke for the receptions, motoring instead to Boston. The present Mrs. Saltonstall arrived with the bridal attendants in a large bus, quite rustic, and was attractive in beige and green afternoon ensemble.

MRS. C. D. DILLON

Divorces do mix things up a bit. I am just modern enough to feel that two people who have lived long enough together to collect a family, could meet in such important moments, exchange greetings pleasantly and continue on their devious ways, but Americans are far too young for such finesse.

Boston Society Leaders Attend

FASHIONABLE BOSTON WAS PRESENT. THEY always look about the same. Garments may change from sables to chiffons, but their expressions are as lifeless as always. Even the youngsters have a hungry look in their eyes. There is one young person whom we will watch with pleasure and she is Mrs. C. Douglas Dillon. May she never lose that sweet, human outlook which is so beautifully mirrored on her bright countenance.

FOR SHEER GOOD LOOKS, John L. himself stole the picture. He is a handsome figure of a man, tall and blonde, and rather interesting looking, and he and Miss Betsy made a Howard Chandler Christy effect as they walked up the aisle. Mrs. August Belmont was present in figured green chiffon, and the Saltonstalls, Rantouls, Belmonts, Phillips, Fessendens and other old names were well represented.

THE COLLATION WAS served on the stone terrace, shaded by giant elms, overlooking the valley and the river. Small tables dotted the lawns and a large awning enclosed one end of the porched terrace, a perfect setting for an out-of-door reception. The house of whitewashed brick has a Southern atmosphere, more so than New England, we sensed, but it was very hospitable and charming with old wall-papers and period furnishings. Even Pete, the family pet, wore a white ribbon on his collar to greet the guests, and the two little flower girls, Miss Jean Saltonstall and Miss Josephine Murray, daughter of pretty Mrs. Henry Murray, Jr., made a sweet picture in their greenaway dresses and green slippers.

WE MISSED SEEING Mrs. A. L. West Movious, and on inquiry heard that she had taken this day to move the family up to Squam Lake for the summer, taking Potter Palmer along.

* * *

MRS. JOHN PHILLIPS ATTENDED with her family. We hear that John, Jr., is going abroad for a couple of years and that Miss Madelaina will be a debutante of this season. Other little tidbits we picked up were that the stork is expected to alight at any time at the Harry McKeans in Beverly Farms and at the Edward Bigelows in Chestnut Hill. You remember Mrs. Bigelow was Caroline Fessenden, who was married to Oliver Ames and her sister, Rose, was married to Edward Bigelow. Oliver Ames was killed in the Great War and Mrs. Rose Bigelow died soon after her marriage. It was then that Caroline and Edward, having such a strong bond between them, married. They are a very popular and charming couple.

ANOTHER NIP IS THAT Mrs. Evans Dick of Beacon Hill has started some kind of a theater venture down on the North Shore. Mrs. Dick is ambitious; she wrote social notes at one time and later political columns, but does not seem to have found her niche as yet. Perhaps this theatrical venture may prove lucratous, not ludicrous.

* * *

MRS. WILLIAM R. SEARS has opened her house at Cohasset. She has recently returned from a long visit in Europe.

Mr. John L. Saltonstall, father of Mrs. August Belmont (Betsy Saltonstall), who gave her in marriage yesterday at Christ Church in Hamilton.

Mr. and Mrs. August Belmont, who are leaving for Europe on their honeymoon, on their return will reside at 162 East 63rd st., New York City.

Mrs. Henry K. Billings, the former Mrs. John L. Saltonstall, mother of Mrs. Belmont (Betsy Saltonstall), arrived in time for the ceremony.

Gay Prints for Street Wear

By ANN ARDEN

PRINTS for spectator sports and street wear this season are seen in such gay colors as orange and lacquer red—there is nothing modest and retiring about them, color contrast is rampant, while the lines of the frocks, paradoxically, have a certain touch of the tailored look about them and still they keep softness and femininity without finish.

SASHES have been revised and add interest and vivid color by an unique arrangement, including a brilliant color contrast—what other trimming is needed? All this is proven in the smart costume pictured, the all-over print design is red, black and gray on white, the round bertha collar is "different," the long sleeves have "airplane" cuffs set on from wrist to elbow, the skirt has intricate cut, and low fullness. The highlight is the unusual girdle in lacquer red, widening to points center front, possible to tie as most becoming to the wearer.

THE ROUGH white straw hat has simple distinction, a medium cloche brim bound in ribbon, repeated on crown band and bow. The white note is repeated in the earrings and many strand necklace. This costume is decorative, yet simple in line and design, very effective for town or country.

* * *

IT TAKES at least three colors to make a chic costume this season, and when those colors consist of some black, a little white, and a dash of red, the result is positively thrilling.

New Romance for Heiress

By CHOLLY KNICKERBOCKER

New York, June 16 (US)—Several weeks ago, I casually commented upon the fact that the good-looking Robert E. Strawbridge, Jr., once of the Quaker City but now very definitely of Gotham, was frequently encountered about in society with Mrs. Evelyn Loew Burrill.

May I now go on record with the prediction that Evelyn, a daughter of the socially exalted W. Goadby Loew, will be signing herself "Mrs. Strawbridge" before we celebrate the advent of 1932?

Evelyn recently divorced Edward Livingston Burrill, Jr.

"Bob" Strawbridge, who has won fame on the polo fields, is a son of the senior Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Strawbridge of Philadelphia. The Berwind of Philadelphia are well supplied with ducats.

Miss Winslow will march to the altar on the arm of her father, and will wear a gown of white satin with a train and lace worn by her grandmother. Her veil will be of tulle, and she will carry a bouquet of gardenias and lilies of the valley.

Her attendants all will wear blue net dresses, with pale yellow hats and carry arm bouquets of spring flowers.

The church will be simply decorated with flowers of the season.

Reception at Home

A reception for several hundred will be in order at the home of the parents of the bride in Narragansett ave. during the afternoon and the couple will leave during the early evening on their wedding trip and like that of the bride's sister, not to be announced. The couple plan to make their home in New York.

Theodora is a granddaughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Theodora A. Hoes and was named after the first mentioned. She is a member of the New York Junior League and an accomplished artist. She studied in the portrait class of Cecelia Beaux.

Mr. Noel, through the marriage of his brother, Louis W. Noel, is also a relative of the Hemenway family, and is equally well known.

Theodora was graduated from the Winsor school, and Mr. Noel from Harvard University. The latter is a guest of Admiral and Mrs. Winslow here today while plans for the wedding ceremony are being completed.

Holy Cross' Oldest Graduate Attends

Worcester, June 16—The Bancroft Hotel was the scene of much activity last night as 500 members of the reunion classes of Holy Cross College gathered for the annual reunions.

In the vanguard of the returning alumni was the Rt. Rev. Mgr. John W. McMahon, '67, of Charlestown, the oldest living graduate of the college who came back to celebrate the 64th anniversary of his graduation.

Something New for Over-Stout Women

The W. S. Rice Corrective Supporter and Brassiere

The front and back are so designed that those great layers of fat that bulge over the abdomen and roll in waves down the back to the waist, are all smoothed out and gently but firmly kept in place to show 10 to 15 pounds reduction.

It lifts up and supports the bust, snugly rounds over the hips, carves the waist line to symmetrical appearance and brings the entire figure into slenderising proportion.

On Free Trial

Made in the famous W. S. Rice factory at Adams, N. Y., and designed by a noted corsetiere, it needs but a try-on to prove it the first and only perfect Reducing Corset ever made for stout women.

In every neighborhood and community are women who have undergone surgical operations, leaving weak places that sometimes break apart with most unfortunate results. A simple attachment of air cushions to the conformer gives perfect support and protection.

Mrs. F. E. Williams, the personal representative of W. S. Rice, with physician registered in Mass., is now here to give the ladies of Boston every opportunity to fully test this wonderful Reducing Corset.

Put it on and see how charmingly it feels, how perfectly it brings you into shape, how nice and comfortable you feel, how easily you breathe, how actively you become, how you can bend over without strain, walk upstairs like a girl, and wear modern gowns with all the appearance and freedom of a perfect figure.

It is made by W. S. Rice, Inc., in the largest and most complete factory of its kind in the world. And if you have been so unfortunate as to have undergone a surgical operation that has left the abdomen weak, a simple attachment of air cushions gives perfect protection.

SCOTS, JOKES, HUMOR; A FINE PLAY PRINTED

By Gilbert Seldes

IF YOU WANT TO KNOW what the intellectuals of America are amused by, the book called "Scotch," published by MacSimon and MacEchuster, will give you a clue. It may also gave you a shock. Mr. Clarence Darrow is amused by this story: "A Scotchman cut himself while shaving, and instantly ran to the nearest hospital to find out if anyone wanted a transfusion, only to find that a fellow-countryman, who had been in a fight and suffered a nosebleed, had beaten him to it." Mr. Darrow, you may remember, is opposed to capital punishment. Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair Lewis together contributed this one: "It was a MacTavish who sent his spats to the cobbler's to be soled and heeled." Mr. Sinclair Lewis—well, you remember Mr. Sinclair Lewis.

Prof. Walter B. Pitkin makes himself sponsor for "Terrible accident in Edinburgh! Taxi skids into the lamppost and kills 14 passengers!" Prof. Pitkin is the author of "The Psychology of Achievement" and has recently made some mean remarks about cigarette smokers. Prof. Pitkin also contributes one of the many digestive jokes included in this volume. Mr. J. P. McEvoy chooses: "Jock, why are you beating your little boy?" "He bought an all-day sucker at three o'clock in the afternoon." Mr. McEvoy is a novelist.

But I beg you not to be distressed. There is a good joke in Scotch. It comes from Punch and I believe is about forty years old—the one that ends "bang went saxpence!"

The Mooney Play

It is reported that a fund is being raised to send the play "Precedent" to the West Coast, not with the hope that the movies will buy it, but because in and near San Francisco the interest in this play should be great. The published text of this passionate argument of the Tom Mooney case is as impressive as the play on the stage. It has the same faults, but the faults do not matter, because this is not a play intended to amuse: it is hardly intended to excite, although the excitement comes unfailingly. The purpose of the play is to present Tom Mooney's case as Mooney and his friends see it.

he interest of actuality, the Mooney interest, in this play is so great that I think we have all been a little indifferent to the excellence of the text itself. The name of I. J. Golden is hardly ever mentioned and all we know of him is that he is a lawyer from St. Louis, and all we guess is that his legal training has somehow stood in the way of a perfect dramatic production. Yet I cannot think of a single professional dramatist in America today who could in any way have improved the last scene of the play in which Delaney (Mooney) stands in his cell where he has stood for fifteen years and talks to his wife and Fremont (Fremont Older). There are only three pages of it—perhaps two minutes of playing time on the stage—and they have the essence of real tragedy.

Novel and Diary

The death of Arnold Bennett leaves John Galsworthy and Hugh Walpole neck to neck as the chief endorsers of other people's books. (Perhaps it is not very sensible of me, but I would like to see a book endorsed and introduced by Mr. Somerset Maugham). Mr. Galsworthy has chosen a pretty good one this time, "From Day to Day," by Ferdynand Goetel. If it were not a good novel, the stunt in this book would be unimportant, and people who have read Andre Gide should not be so surprised to read a romantic story with the novelist's own comment on it inserted in the form of a diary after each page or two. The story is the love affair of a Polish prisoner of war; the diary is his chaotic life in Poland after the war, and suddenly and unexpectedly the past merges into the present. The most masterly stroke in the book is the appearance of the romantic novel cross-crossed out on the page before the reader knows that the girl from the past is about to reappear.—(Viking).

That's the Way It Is

By Charles E. Noyes

Give up these silly tricks, my dear,
I'm not the boy to fall
For worn-out gags like these you try,
For such an ancient stall.

I knew that when you leave me flat
It's just to lead me on.
When you step out with other lads,
I'm still the leading man.

Such stunts as these may well have worked
When Cleo loved and died.
You'll never take the undersigned
For such a silly ride.

If you think I will play the sap
Your reasoning is hazy;
Give up these silly tricks, my dear,
Before you drive me crazy.

The China Closet

Blue Sevres, a long-dead Louis once held dear,
Great-grandpa found in China, when he cruised
From Salem, in the good ship Mary Ann.
While Aunt Faith's Wedgwood Nymphs pursuing Pan,
Elopement with an English squire excused.
How a collector's heart with joy would dance—
Yet, as I dust them, a vague sadness steals
Across me, at their hints of gay romance
And valiant quest. Each treasured shelf reveals
More haunting charm in one's ancestral tree
Than could a learned genealogy!

"Shh—that's the princ e, traveling incognito!"

Elizabeth

By Charles Hanson Towne

Three years ago, on my way to Europe, St. John Irvine introduced me to a charming little lady sitting on the deck of the Berengaria. She was the Countess Russell, better known to the world at large as "Elizabeth."

"You are my favorite light novelist," I said. Whereupon she promptly replied, "I wish you'd left out the adjective." And from that moment we became friends.

Elizabeth was as poor a sailor as I happen to be; and so we used to have our luncheon brought to us on deck. So many days, as the ship tossed, I heard her say, in that uneasy whisper of those who do not really like the sea, "Why, oh, why did I leave my happy home for this!" Then, when she felt a little better, she would make the most amusing comments on the various passengers who wandered by. There was nothing acrimonious in her ready wit. She simply talked exactly as she writes, without malice, but seeing beneath the cheap surface of life, showing up the little idiosyncrasies of our fellow passengers. It proved an engaging voyage for me, and I bless the hour when I met Elizabeth.

She had, as you probably know, been married to a German, Count von Arnheim, who died long before the World War. After the war was over, Elizabeth felt that she should return to Germany and see her in-laws; and most amusingly she told me of her first encounter with them. She rushed, in her breezy way, into that staid German home, where her late husband's relatives were all lined up to receive her, and exclaimed enthusiastically, "Hello, everybody!" To her amazement, a tall sister-in-law stepped from the phalanx and said, most seriously:

"Elizabeth, dieses ist ein Deutches Haus, und hier wird nur Deutsch gesprochen."

"That put me in my humble place," laughed the incomparable Elizabeth, "and from then on of course I had to speak German."

All of which leads up to the fact that Elizabeth's latest novel is now before me. It is called "Father" (Doubleday, Doran) and it comes under the category of her lighter work.

How does she keep up this vein of humor? She must have found the secret of eternal youth; for she is as sprightly as she was in the very beginning of her long literary career.

The book opens with a bang. "Father" is a writer, and has been a widower for a year. He is not a popular writer, but he has a certain limited following, and he works hard over his manuscript. His daughter, Jennifer, a thirty-three-year-old spinster, takes care of him, copying out his pages for him, correcting them, and likewise keeping house for him in Gower Street, London.

But the day comes when he announces to her that he has taken unto himself a second wife, some years younger than Jennifer; and as he is about to proceed on his honeymoon to Norway, he tells his daughter that of course he expects things to go on as usual. Elizabeth says: "He was, that is, doing his duty by her; and, as sometimes happens with duty, the doing of it made him cross. Now, the last thing father had meant to be on his wedding day was cross, so naturally, when he found himself being it, he became much crosser."

I like that sort of biting humor; and I hope you do too. But if you don't, then you will not care for Elizabeth—the same Elizabeth of the German Garden and "The Caravaners" and "The Pastor's Wife." She has a knack of getting at people, and in her own field she cannot be surpassed. But even in her airiest chapters she is often profound, for, like all true humorists, she is likewise a philosopher.

All of Elizabeth's books make delightful reading aloud; and of how many writers can one say that?

"Father" is as gay as anything Elizabeth has ever done, and it will surely meet with that wide favor which it deserves.

Fishing

By Idwal Jones

It seems a clergyman went to Lake Placid to fish, and was rowed about by a native who paid no attention to him and looked bored.

"You don't often have a clergyman out here, do you?"

"Yuh, I had a Bishop last week. Ol' Bishop Blank."

"You don't say! And what kind of luck did he have?"

"Terrible. He just cussed too much. Couldn't catch no fish with all that cussing."

"Incredible! He must have been annoyed. What did he say?"

"Well, it was awful, the way he cussed. He pulled up a big trout, and the line broke. Then I says: 'Hell!'

To some million people nothing matters very much these days except that the fishing season has opened. They have made a prodigious outlay for tackle and licenses. They will ride trains for the country, endure strange mattresses, bad meals, fatigue and the chance of imbibing whiskey that might have lethal effects.

Nothing can restrain their primal instinct to slay trout. Tribulations lie in wait for them. They will catch cold, step into muddy holes, get their pet leaders snarled atop some willow tree, and sit for hours in a flat-boat, to be rained upon, with their heads thrust through newspapers. Bogged, they remain as still as toads under a leaf.

Not only men, but women, too. The fishing urge is no respector of sexes. It was a woman, the nun Juliana Berners, who wrote the first book on fishing, and beat Walton to it by a century and a half. She observed Friday, of course, and loved baked gudgeon, which sounds pretty good, though nobody I know ever tasted it.

She speaks of the "exaltation of angling." That's accurate. All genuine anglers are in a state of exaltation, which makes them incapable of telling the truth about fish.

I should like to tell more about the privations anglers have to undergo, but I am afraid of discouraging myself from going this week-end.

The wetter and more miserable those anglers are, the happier they find themselves. They are to be envied. But somehow I envy more a local acquaintance who is the mightiest angler in all Manhattan. That is, in theory.

It was he who showed me the "Nun a boke." He spent five years tracking that down and he wouldn't give it up for five seasons of tarpon fishing in Florida.

His study is lined with glass cases full of fishing-rods. Some are 200 years old, and have whalebone tips. One rod belonged to Cleveland. Some weigh no more than a feather, and are worth ten times their weight in gold. You cannot follow a connoisseur into the dizzy empyrean of abstract values. He would scorn to own a rod costing less than $45 or thereabouts. I hope he will never find out I have a mail-order rod for which I paid $2.85.

His reels are wondrous, with jewelled bearings. He has a Shakespeare reel that cost as much as his gold watch. He has drawers full of flies that would take an entomologist a year to classify.

Izaak Walton, is more than a name to him. In his fishing library are the five editions of "The Compleat Angler," that came out between 1653 and 1676, when Old Ike, as we rank amateurs call him, was alive and swatting the Dee. Also Kingsley's "Chalk Stream Studies," to obtain which he lawyered a divorce case for an angler who loved the trout stream better than his wife.

He is full of yarns, too. But none about his own exploits. He hates to get wet feet, and only went fishing once. That was three years ago. He made a cast, and by a fluke he hooked a perch just near the tail. And it was the only fish he ever caught.

Just because you have a lot of rods doesn't mean you have to go fishing. Any more than if you collect swords you are expected to cut somebody's head off.

Detour.

If people must have broken hearts
And say that I'm to blame
Why can't they pick the pieces up?
My feet are cut and lame.
I don't like findin' past affairs
Before me in the way.
I'd rather take a detour round
Than bring back yesterday

Other Men's Thoughts

'BLATANT RADIO ADVERTISING' CONDEMNED

New York, June 16 (AP)—Solution of the problem as to what is proper in broadcast advertising programs rests with the listeners themselves, Frank A. Arnold, director of public development of the National Broadcasting Co., told the Advertising Federation of America today.

"Unfortunately," he said, "there are being broadcast daily advertising programs in which the element of good taste apparently never enters. It is these forms of blatant advertising, direct selling, reiteration of price, undue use of superlatives, statements reflecting on competitors, repetition on repetition, that are gradually contaminating the entire structure of broadcast advertising.

"A part of this deplorable situation is due to the fact that altogether too few among those engaged with writing and placing of advertising on the air have learned the proper technique. I am inclined to think that the answer to this problem rests with the public."

Mr. Arnold said in general the public approves of the sponsored program, adding that the radio listens to such programs primarily for entertainment or information.

"The public does not listen to an advertising program primarily for the advertising," he continued. "The commercial credit is accepted as the admission price. The public does not seriously object to the proper use of the advertising credit. It does object to the improper use of the advertising privilege and is at present voicing its disapproval in no uncertain language."

WHO WOULD DREAM to look at these recent photographs that she is 39 years old—appeared first in the Follies way back in 1913! This fascinating little dancer, whose irresistible charm has won hearts by the thousand on the stage and on the screen, says: "I advise the woman who would keep youth to give her complexion careful regular attention. I have never found anything else as good as Lux Toilet Soap for keeping one's skin always youthfully fresh."

"I NEVER MIND telling my age," says dainty little Ann Pennington. "As long as a woman doesn't look old, I don't see why birthdays should worry her.

"And nowadays there isn't much excuse for looking one's age. Any one who really wants to can keep youthful charm right through the years.

"We on the stage, of course, guard youth as our most priceless treasure. Without it, we can't hope to hold the admiration we have won.

"So no matter how busy we may be, we give our complexions the most diligent care. A skin with that soft glowing sort of look is always appealing. For years I have used Lux Toilet Soap regularly. It does leave my skin so youthfully smooth and fresh!"

THIS IS LIFE

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

THE AUTHORITIES OF TOWNS within driving distance of great cities have on their hands a problem which is becoming more acute every year. The town, for instance, is fortunate enough to possess a large pond or lake, a pleasant grove, or a good beach on the ocean. These attractions have been not only a great source of pleasure to the permanent inhabitants, but have attracted summer residents who buy or rent homes, pay taxes and spend their money for living expenses in the town. They have formed the kind of summer community which has made New England famous all over the United States.

ROBERT E. ROGERS

Of late years, however, there is hardly a place of the sort which is not overrun, not merely on Sundays and holidays, but every evening with automobile pleasure parties, which only too often include the kind of people who respect no one's rights but their own, and for whom nothing will suffice but the sternest measures of repression and exclusion.

The Automobile Hoodlums

The result is that in the future many decent and well-behaved families are going to suffer because of the acts of the automobile hoodlums. These decent people already feel agrieved because everywhere along the shore, beaches and points of land which were formerly open to all are being fenced off and closed to the casual visitor. The recent decision of the Medford authorities to close Wright's Pond, if possible, to all but Medford residents, forecasts the possibility that a policy which is already in force all along our ocean front will be put into effect also at our inland groves and lakes.

The automobilists will have no one to blame but themselves, the hoodlums because they are hoodlums, and the decent people because only too often they are slack and careless in their attitude toward property rights, and because they have made no attempt to take a stand for decency against people who are not decent. So they are all going to suffer together.

It is the law in Massachusetts that ocean property is owned down to low water mark. Most deeds to ocean property specify that, except where ancient rights of way or town landings have prior right. Formerly respectable people were allowed freely to picnic on such property. But the automobile hoodlum from the big cities is a different sort of animal. He litters the ground with his waste, he builds illegal fires, he undresses where he pleases and swims naked if he cares to. He makes the out-of-doors a public toilet. He is noisy, profane and truculent, abusive to women and ribald to men. He is lawless, filthy and disgusting. And the female of the species is often even more deadly than the male.

They crowd the little beaches surrounded by old winter residents and summer property owners. Since they are usually a pretty low type of human animal, they drive everybody else off the beach. They line the streets leading to the water with solid lines of parked cars regardless of regulations. If asked to move they are abusive and threatening. The local police are outnumbered and unobstrusive.

Inviting the Lawless

There are some town authorities and real estate men and business men who are so short-sighted as to imagine that encouraging these people, supplying them with parking places, bath houses and refreshment stands, is somehow, helping out the town. They are perfectly willing to affront and insult and inconvenience their own townspeople and their permanent summer residents merely to collect a little quick and easy money from these motor vagrants, who spend no real money in the town except a little change for tonic and hot dogs. The beach or grove or lake has to be cleaned up after them. They damage lawns and shrubbery and flowers. There is sure to be an automobile accident or two in which local people suffer, as the visitors' cars are usually only cars by courtesy and collisions do not matter.

A year or two ago the local authorities of a well-known seaside place were foolish enough to grant a permit for a motor camp, dance hall and hot dog stand right in the midst of a beautiful and expensive summer residential section. It took a long, hard legal fight before the taxpayers were able to protect their property from the vagrants.

There will probably be a howl raised at the action of the Medford authorities in putting up fences, installing arc lights and protecting their community against the motor rowdies. But I predict that more and more the permanent residents of recreation resorts are going to follow suit. The Medford people did just right! They ought to grant admission to their lake only by ticket, by real estate tax receipt or poll tax receipt.

Problem for Town Authorities

Town authorities will do well to ponder the action of the Medford city fathers. They all have a choice to make. Do they intend to keep their community a place for decent, respectable, solid citizens, or do they intend to drive them all out in favor of the automobile vagrant for the cheap pickings they can get out of them? For they must choose between one or the other. People who have something are usually likely to be careful of their own and others' property. People who have nothing waste what little of their own they do have and haven't the slightest idea of what labor and patience and care it takes to produce something. Theirs but to waste and to destroy!

The place for the automobile vagrant is the large public resort or reservation maintained by the state or municipality precisely for such as he. They provide everything that anyone can wish for except perhaps privacy, and privacy is the right only of those who have earned it. Furthermore, such places are well policed, as they must be if they are not to become intolerably offensive. There are not enough of these places. The state undoubtedly should acquire and maintain more of them. Revere Beach, for instance, should be doubled in size at once. It could easily be made to accommodate a larger number than now.

This is a sad commentary on our old American ideals of liberty, tolerance and democracy. But the automobile hoodlum himself has destroyed these ideals. As the explorer said of the cannibals, he has no manners and beastly customs. If every place that own a neighborhood beach or lake or grove will follow the example of Medford, will rigorously discourage him, exclude him, police him and keep him moving on, perhaps he will at last learn a few elementary decencies and allow the rest of us to enjoy the country-side that he has defiled.

GIRL IS STRUCK BY TAXICAB

Miss Betty DeGroot, 29, of 42 Copeland st., Roxbury, is recuperating in City Hospital today from injuries inflicted on her head and body when she stepped in the way of a taxicab in front of 157 Huntington ave., Back Bay, yesterday.

The driver, Joseph F. Shea of Norway st., Back Bay, took her to the hospital and it was thought she had sustained a fractured skull. Her name was taken off the danger list today, however, when X-rays determined only abrasions and bruises.

DOG STARTS TO SWIM ATLANTIC

It's a long swim to the Land o' the Heather, but that is what a Scotch collie evidently attempted. The animal was picked up in the harbor today by Sergt. Ariel Dunham of the police boat Watchman. The collie was paddling his way eastbound toward the outer harbor.

The license number on the dog's collar showed it to be registered to Leo Doucette of 78 Ballou st., Quincy. Dunham took it to the harbor police division and Doucette was notified.

Sought by dry agents since April 17 for alleged complicity in transporting liquor to a drug store in Broadway, South Boston, Francis Ross of B st., that district, was arrested today by a deputy United States marshal and taken before Commissioner Edwin C. 3 FIRES PROBED IN CAMBRIDGE

Believing that three fires in the premises occupied by the Harvard Press, 1 Divinity ave., Cambridge, to be of incendiary origin, State Fire Marshal John W. Reth, Chief James M. Casey of the Cambridge fire department, and Cambridge police, today started an investigation.

Two of the fires in the building were discovered by employes yesterday. The first was in a loading shed at the rear of the building. Chief Casey discovered paper piled up in the vicinity of the blaze.

When the firemen returned to their quarters they were ordered back in response to a still alarm by the employes of the Harvard Press. This time a blaze was found in a clothes locker in the basement. Paper was also found piled up here.

Today the firemen were again summoned to the same building for a fire in a shelf on the first floor. Paper was also found here. The building is known as Randall Hall.

Saugus Judge Finds Cause to Bind Floyd Folsom Over to the Grand Jury

Lloyd Folsom of Roland st., Marblehead, sat in one of Judge Ludden's easy chairs and heard the court hold him in bonds of $4000 for criminal attack, assault with a dangerous weapon and carrying a concealed weapon.

The court was moved to the home through illness of Judge Ludden.

Folsom was arrested yesterday afternoon by Capt. John P. Stuart and Patrolman James Sullivan of Saugus after Mary Durgin, 21, of Peabody, claimed she was attacked.

According to her story to the court, she was taken for an automobile ride yesterday by Folsom, in celebration of her 21st birthday.

On Old Country rd., Saugus woods, she said he made advances and when they were resisted drew a 32-calibre revolver and threatened her.

He also drew a fountain pen tear gas bomb from his pocket and threatened to use it, she said.

He finally desisted and drove her back to Peabody, where she made the report to her parents.

Folsom pleaded not guilty to all charges.

CURLEY FROWNS ON BUTTONS

In a statement issued today Mayor Curley expressed his disapproval of the distribution of campaign buttons bearing his name as running mate to Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt of New York in the 1932 presidential race.

Supporters of the mayor this morning opened an unofficial boom for his candidacy for the vice-presidential nomination with a wholesale distribution of buttons labelled "Roosevelt and Curley."

"The Democratic party in convention assembled should be privileged to suggest whoever it sees fit as the running mate for the presidential candidate, and I could conceive of no benefits that would result from a ticket made up entirely of easteners," the mayor's statement said.

"In my opinion the Democratic party with Roosevelt as its presidential nominee will be successful, and the duty of every individual interested in America and Americans is to help and not hamper the party.

"The distribution of buttons is unwise, and has not been authorized by me."

The formal movement proposing the Mayor as Roosevelt's running mate will be launched tonight at the annual Night Before banquet at the State Armory, Bunker Hill st., Charlestown.

Every potential Massachusetts delegate to the Democratic National Convention in 1932 is expected to attend.

Revere Man Held on Radio Charges

Arraigned before Commissioner Jenney, in federal court today, on a charge of operating a radio transmitter without a license, Edward Seigel of Forest ave., Revere, pleaded not guilty and was held in $5000 for the grand jury.

According to Asst. U. S. Atty. Hugo Bagnulo, Seigel was one of several men alleged to be in charge of a station which had contact with rum ships a sea from a concealed station in Beachmont. He was defaulted in federal court April 17.

FIVE AND TEN

By Fannie Hurst

(Copyright, 1929, by Fannie Hurst.)

(This famous story has been made into a talking picture by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer with Marion Davies in the leading role.)

"WHAT FINE, steel-point longband. Yours?" asked Gratton, as he glanced over Rarick's manuscript.

"Yes. Brevity being the soul of wit, that would just about be the bulk of my story."

"Your life?"

"Everything but, and yet nothing else. It is the story of the house and man my wealth built. Of the walls it reared for me and the hearth it kindled. It is filled with moralizing, the kind nobody will take the time to read. It is the result of my study, my thoughts, my experience.

"It is my last will and testament. But more of that presently. I wonder if you happen to have heard, Gratton, rumors that Rarick Chain is about to be absorbed by Bilt Chain?"

"Yes."

"They are founded on fact."

"You have completed that job?"

"Yes. And now I have a new one. A stiff one. The job of dying a poor man. The entire philosophy behind that determination is in this stack of papers. The years I have left are few in which to give back intelligently the $180,000,000 to the people from whom I have earned it. Earned it, mind you.

Easy Happiness

"If there is anything miraculous about the vastness of my wealth, it lies in the fact that corruption has passed me by.

"The average man and woman—Gratton, is beholden to the object, the inanimate thing for his comfort and much of his happiness.

"I have anointed the tongues of the masses of children whose humdrum lives stand ready to snatch them out of youth with the red of the sticky lollypop, and they tell me that the sin of ugliness and cheapness is upon me.

"That may all be true, Gratton, but I know to what extent I have made living easier to the masses whose days are chained to the trivialities of things. My daughter Jennifer owns a six-carat pigeon-blood ruby ring. The craving for that ring is deep in the hearts of millions of women like her.

"I partially satisfy that craving in red-glass ten-cent rings. Women with scalded, horny hands can now cope with their dishwater in ten-cent rubber gloves—there is a side to my

100 IN PERIL WHEN ENGINE IS DERAILED

RIGHT OFF THE SHIP

THE NELLIE TOOK A SUDDEN SPURT FORWARD

"WHAT WE NEED," said Thelma, "is a few cases of real Scotch and real rye, not this bootleg stuff that's cut three ways from Sunday."

Tommy Haddon laughed. "Try and get it," he said.

"There's the Nellie," said Thelma; "she'll do 30 an hour at a pinch."

"And then"? queried the other.

"Well, it's about an hour's run or less to a rum runner, isn't it"?

"You don't mean you'd go out there for a little rum and run the risk of geting nabbed"? asked Haddon.

"I not only mean it, I'm going," replied the girl, "and I won't get caught—you can always throw the stuff overboard, you know."

"Am I invited"? asked Haddon.

"Why not"? she asnwered.

"Then let's pick a suitable time- say about dusk—you're not afraid of the dark, are you"?

"We'll start about four this afternoon," said Thelma, "and we'll be back by six barring accidents. And you needn't say anything to the family about it; what they don't know won't hurt them."

Promptly at four the Nellie with Thelma at the wheel chugged away from her mooring.

The speed boat seemed to leap over the smooth summer sea and in what seemed an incredibly short time the rum runner loomed up in the distance.

There was not only one but several. Thelma, hatless, looking very nautical in her sailor suit headed direct for the nearest craft and slowing down circled close.

Come Aboard!
Bearded Man Invited

A bearded face looked over the rail and bellowed questions through a megaphone

"Hey there, what you want!"

Thelma made a cup of her hands as she shouted back

"Okay, come alongside"

The runner wasn't a big ship and Thelma had no difficulty in getting close

The bearded man leaned over the rail. "How about coming aboard and sampling the goods?" he asked

Haddon shook his head

Thelma didn't even answer him

"Sure," she called back; "like to."

The captain of the runner gave an order and in a short time the Nellie was riding easily while Thelma and Haddon climbed aboard the runner

"Welcome," said the captain, "glad to see you—'tisn't every day we see a good looking gal on deck—how old are you, miss,—just about the age of my own daughter, I take it—come along to the cabin."

The decks of the runner were spotless and the cabin into which the captain ushered them was equally clean and homelike.

"Now then," said the skipper, "sit down and take it easy. Will you have a highball or a cocktail or a cup of tea?—I take tea myself."

The Real Thing
Haddon Had to Admit

In the end one of each — brought—Haddon admitted his Scotch was the real thing

"Has to be," said the skipper "I always insist on that—what they do to it ashore is nobody's business but when it leaves my boat it's the real thing—now then you say you're giving a party—how much do you want?"

Thelma figured. "Well, I should say we'd need about fifty quarts. "Okay," said the skipper and named a price. "I'm giving it to you at the regular rate," he informed her as he took the bills she proffered him these fellows wise?"

The 50 quarts were stowed away in the hold of the Nellie and after a cheery send off the speedboat headed for shore

"Now what do you think of the desperadoes on the rum runners?" asked Thelma.

Haddon grinned "You win" he said. The runner was hull down by this time, but there was a small craft making toward them and tearing through the water at break neck speed

"What's that?" asked Haddon.

"Get the glass out of the locker," commanded the girl, "looks like a chaser to me and the wrong kind at that."

Haddon got out the glass and focused it on the approaching craft. "You're right," he said, "she's got a small gun mounted forward—what'll we do?"

"I hate to throw all this good liquor overboard," said Thelma, whose flushed cheeks showed that she was enjoying the excitement of the chase.

"I'll say so," echoed Haddon. "Do you suppose it's a trick—do you suppose the skipper put these fellows wise?"

"No, I don't," retorted Thelma. "Let's see what chance we have to beat 'em to shore."

She opened the throttle and the Nellie took a sudden spurt forward

"Lord," cried Thelma, "if the family ever hears of this, good night speed boat! Are they gaining?"

"They sure are," said Haddon, and how."

Puff of Smoke!
The Nellie Fired Upon

"They'll be shooting next," said the girl.

No sooner were the words spoken than a puff of smoke, followed by the report of a gun, verified her prediction

"Slow down," said Haddon, "and I'll throw the stuff over"

"Not on your life," said Thelma. "Leave it to me. If I can't manage to wheedle a lot of revenue agents I'll throw up my job."

The Nellie was almost at a standstill when the swifter craft slipped alongside

"Well," said the girl, "are you happy?"

"Sure am," grinned the man who stepped aboard the Nellie. "What's the big idea beating it away from us?"

"I wonder," said Thelma, smiling sweetly at him.

He was fumbling in his pocket. "The skipper wanted me to ask you if you'd mail this here letter to his daughter—he forgot it."

He held out an envelope and Thelma burst into a laugh

"Sure," she said, "the moment we reach shore—is that all?"

"That's all mis—" He clambered back to his own craft and backed away

Haddon seated himself beside Thelma when the Nellie got under way again. "Say, he remarked, "they're sure desperate fellows aren't they—these rum-runners?"

And they both laughed.

PROGRAM WILL PROVIDE WORK FOR MANY

Conditions Brought by Boston Evening American Will Be Corrected

The Boston Evening American campaign for proper housing for the city's school children was recognized today with the school committee's announcement of plans for construction of two new high and six elementary schools this year.

Announcement of the construction program was made at the meeting of the committee last night by Dr. Joseph V. Lyons. The location of the new buildings and other details of the plans are not as yet definite, however.

Dr. Lyons stated he hoped to have a complete resume of the proposed building program ready to present to the next regular meeting of the committee in order that construction work could be started immediately.

WILL AID UNEMPLOYED

There was a two-fold objective in speeding up building construction in the new program, Dr. Lyons told the board. First, it would provide better housing conditions for the school children and, second, it would give jobs to many unemployed, he said. He estimated that several thousand persons would be employed in the completion of the building program.

"There has been a vital need for proper and decent housing for our school children," he told the committee members.

"It is a waste of money to cover an ancient building with a fire escape when a modern school structure will replace the old buildings and allow children to be taught in an up-to-date school and will eliminate the necessity for patching up these old buildings besides doing away with many of them."

URGES PROMPT ACTION

It was pointed out that bond issues outside the debt limit must be approved by the mayor and the bonds signed by him, and that he had threatened to withhold approval of the issue unless the $1,250,000 allotted for school construction be left unappropriated.

EYES OF WORLD FOCUS ON LAMAR, MO., AGAIN

Hundreds of thousands of readers of city papers will see the picture of Dick Dalton, of Lamar, 11-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Dalton, along with a story of his wonderful gift of imitating birds. Dick can call a bird so that the feathered songster will answer him. He is the wonder of all boys. City papers heard of Dick's great gift, wrote to Lamar to learn the facts about him and now have obtained Dick's photograph.

LOVE A-LA-MODE—WHEN THE PRIMROSE PATH BORES

By HELEN ROWLAND

THE AVERAGE man seldom turns from the primrose path until the scenery along the way has begun to bore him with its monotony.

When a girl speaks glowingly of a "perfect mutual understanding," she means that SHE understands, and to make the man THINK that he understands her.

Don't marry a girl merely because she is the kind who would get up at 6 o'clock and cook your breakfast for you; wait until you find one who would cheerfully wait up until 8 o'clock and warm over your dinner for you.

The average girl is something halfway between the angel her mother paints her, and the designing little hussy, or the empty-headed featherweight that her prospective mother-in-law thinks her.

Even the most fascinating of women, like any other stimulant, ceases to have that exhilarating effect on a man's pulse after her kisses have become a daily habit.

Offer a man friendship, adventure, hate or indifference, and he will cheerfully swallow them; but, somehow, sentiment from a woman seems to choke him after the first few tastes.

Somehow a man never becomes so cynical that he won't believe any sweet, young thing, who tells him that she loves him, in spite of his bald spot, his overdupes—and all his money.

Sometimes a woman clings to her husband merely because he is all in the world that stands between her and the boredom of dining alone.

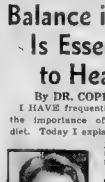
Balance in Diet Is Essential to Health

By DR. COPELAND.

I HAVE frequently referred to the importance of a balanced diet. Today I explain more fully just what is meant by this term.



Dr. Copeland

First, sufficient calories to furnish heat and energy. The energy foods are fats, starches and sugars.

In addition, it must contain inorganic salts, iron, phosphorus, lime and iodine. These elements are essential for the proper working of the body. Health cannot be maintained when they are lacking in the diet.

The food must also supply tissue-building elements. These substances are known as the proteins. They are contained in milk, meat and eggs.

It is essential that there be sufficient bulk and variety of food. There should be plenty of the necessary vitamins. Vitamins are most abundant in fresh fruits and vegetables. No diet is a balanced diet without the supply of vitamin-containing foods.

There are foods, too, that are of value as "bulk" or "roughage." They contain indigestible material, such as cellulose, the fibre of vegetables. This cellulose serves as a stimulant to proper elimination. It hurries the elimination of the waste products of the balanced diet.

A balanced diet should provide approximately the same food value each day. This means that a person should not overeat one day and fast the next day. The body is a furnace which should be stoked regularly and equally each day.

Good health cannot exist when the recognized food requirements are ignored. Since this program of food supplies and balances the needs of the body, it is aptly spoken of as a "balanced diet."

A balanced diet insures the full enjoyment of health. It protects against disease. It promotes growth and development.

IN THE camp, set on the shores of a lost blue lake, rippled with the spring wind, chill with winter still, there by the great and leaping trees, Lorrimer thought over the past months.

He'd said good-by to Delight, had stammered: "If there's ever anything I can do—" Had meant it. In a sense he missed her, reluctant though he had been to find her daily. She had been part of him. Now, it was as if she had never existed. She'd laughed into his eyes and said, "Of course I'll let you know. Was I ever known to turn down a good offer? Well, just once; but circumstances are agin me. And there's one thing you can do for me, right now."

"What?" he asked, eagerly.

He hadn't sneered.

But he knew now, tramping through the woods, smoking his pipe by the lake shore, watching the birds with idle eyes which dreamed over their beauty and yet did not really see them, watching the deer come down to drink, sitting by the log fire in the stone hearth at night, when the cold spring darkness shut in, looking into the vibrant life of the flames and thinking—wondering —longing.

He knew that it was Mary Lou he wanted; knew, that he had loved, still loved her; knew that the sudden intrusion in his life of the vanished Delight had made no difference. Yet it had been so hard to adjust himself, hard or still to face the fact that perhaps after all every word Mary Lou had said to him, every evidence of her caring for him which he had built so much, might be, as her coming to him had been, playacting, deception, a salaried part, a necessary measure, camouflage.

Yet—how honest had been her eyes! If she had not cared, would she have taken such pains with him? And she'd been happy. He could have staked his life on that. Happiness had radiated from her, times when they'd been alone, riding, reading, walking together, laughing, discussing every subject under the heavens.

He would go back and find her. He'd find her if he had to turn the world upside down to do so. He'd take her hands and look in her eyes again and ask his question. She'd answer—honestly.

Once more he would go questing for a lost delight.

And while Lorrimer tramped the woods and grew clear with himself and his heart, Larry had been questing also. Margaret Lorrimer had told him that Mary Lou was not at Oakdale, but he had satisfied himself on that score by going out, ostensibly to see Billy. No, she was not there. On Jenny's advice he combed the various Y. W. C. A.'s in town, hung about employment agencies, especially the one which Margaret had recommended Mary Lou that day so long ago. Margaret remembered giving her the letter to Sarah Manly.

But she hadn't been there.

"Afraid," thought Larry. "Is not the letter, in case we should try to trace her. Smart girl, Tom smart."

He started looking through the hotels. It would have taken longer to find her than it did, if it hadn't happened that the paper sent him to cover the visit of a new celebrity, an English novelist reputed to be, ag well, the best dressed man in the world. He was speaking one night before a rather large and decidedly mixed audience in a new hotel for women, part club, part hostelry, and because of the man's name and the startling "message" he was bruited to American womanhood, Larry was sent to interview him and listen to the lecture, as his editor scented an amusing story written in Larry's peculiarly entertaining style.

The Rudy Vallee of literature," said the editor. "Well, listen to his crooning and give us a story. Keep it short of libel, my lad."

'Unstable as Water'—Yet Most Alluring, Withal

By WINIFRED BLACK

They're brother and sister, you can tell that by one look at them, and they do quarrel so deliciously.

They get on together very well, though, most of the time.

Winifred Black

This is very important just now—for they are traveling together, doing The Grand Tour, and familiarizing themselves with the great world, and some of its odd little ways.

In every place they stay they make friends, and the girl always finds, or is found by, some attractive male who just can't keep away from her to save his life.

Brother has to step lively to keep out of the way of the girls who are always running after him.

He prefers to do his own chasing, thank you—and he does plenty of it.

When the train pulls out of a station, there's sure to be one of sister's admirers on the platform to bid her good-bye, and try to make her promise to send "a poor little postcard, anyhow."

And somewhere in the town is some girl looking at the clock and saying, "Well, he's gone. I wonder if I'll ever see him again?"

Yesterday I saw them standing on the deck of a little boat and looking at the water that rushed gaily by down the river.

"Jean," said brother, "that's it —the water. You are exactly like that water, don't you know.

"I was looking at you this morning when you were bidding that, chap good-bye — not bad looking, you know, rather attractive to tell the truth—but water, after all, clear, shining, nice to see — and as unstable as the moon."

Sister laughed.

"Quite so," she said. "I was thinking the same thing about you.

"I wonder if it's nice to be a mountain, and stand still—dignified and serene, the same yesterday, today and forever?"

Brother sighed.

"I don't know," he said. "I think it would be rather nice to know right where you were every minute of teh day and night, always liking the same people and having the same people like you, and—"

"Tell me more, brother," she said, "did she get tired of you first, or did you tire of her?"

Yes, brother was right—water clear, bright, beautiful water — but dangerous, treacherous, not to be relied upon.

"Unstable as water," so they said a thousand years ago.

Well, after all, that's one of the things that makes water so alluring, isn't it? It's never the same from one hour to the next.

But when it comes to people—

Two-Fabric Frock in Favor

By PARIS BUREAU.

PARIS, June 16—The material advantages of the evening frock fashioned of two different fabrics are beginning to be appreciated.

Perhaps a little timorous at first of this radical departure from sartorial precedent, women are fast coming to like it and one sees ever so many smart combinations of velvet and tulle, satin and lace, crepe and net in the form of extremely attractive evening frocks. Color is the link that unites the two fabrics, for they must be of exactly matching hue.

Pastel shades seem to be the ideal colors for these frocks, and there is as a rule no trimming or extra ornamentation.

For surely the two materials offer enough embellishment and interest and the introduction of any extraneous trimming would spoil the whole effect of the frock, which is, as a rule, one of extreme smartness.

Of course, we are all familiar with evening frocks that combine chiffon and lace, but the effect of a satin or velvet skirt and a hip yoke with a skirt of tulle or lace is a decidedly different and novel one.

Miss Fairfax Tells Girl to Be Discreet

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

When one has gone out with a young man a few times and does not care to continue the acquaintance, what would be a good way to drop him and, if he asks why, what would be the proper reply? BLONDIE.

Dear Blondie: I wish you'd been a little more frank with me and told me if the man had given you any real reason for breaking with him, or if it were just caprice, or perhaps because he didn't spend enough on you, or some such thing. If he has done something to make him unworthy of your friendship, just drop him! But if you're doing this for some trivial reason, it would be kinder to use tact, and make the process as painless as possible. When he invites you out, make some excuses and, when he calls, be "not at home." If he asks why you're doing this, be guided by the same discretion.

He Is No Apollo

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX.

I met a young man 24 years of age. He seems very much but here is the point: He is not good-looking at all. He intends to marry me, and I have friends who would kid me about him, I know. He loves me dearly. I am sincere. He is my ideal in every other way. Would you let a little thing like looks stop a happiness? Answer as soon as possible C. D.

Dear C. D.: If you're so lukewarm about a young man who is your ideal in every respect but appearance, I think you'd be doing him a great injustice in marrying him. What are you looking for—a real beauty, or a nice wax figure in a tailor's window?

As for "loving him very much"—if you did, my dear, your friends wouldn't get very far with their kidding. Nothing can be quite as angry as a girl, genuinely in love, when someone has the insolence to make fun of the object of her affection.

Good Form to Shake Hands

By MRS. BEECKMAN

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Will you kindly advise me if it is correct to shake hands when leaving, with the host and hostess, and when thanking them for a pleasant evening, or is it better form to omit the handshaking?

MARIE.

There is something so intimate and so friendly about the leave-taking between a hostess and a guest, that it seems inevitably to suggest a handshake to accompany the words that are spoken. And I can remember very, very few times when I have ever seen the handshake omitted under the circumstances. When we go to the hostess to take our leave and to thank her for the hospitality that she has offered us, is the most natural thing in the world for her to extend her hand. We tell her what a happy time we have had, and how much we appreciated her hospitality, and she tells us she is so glad we came, and she hopes to see us again soon. It is the hostess and the host who extend the hand of hospitality and not we who decide the course to follow. We may decide it in our own homes —but we hope you will not also omit this gracious custom as you take leave of your guests.

Introducing Three Couples

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Will you please tell me the correct way of introducing three couples, all married? One couple is very young; the girl is the daughter of one of the couples present. I know them all very well. MRS. W.

First introduce the two older women to each other, and then the girl to the other women, and last the men to the men. Use the form, "Mrs. Waters, may I present Mr. Mann?", or just the names, "Mrs. Waters, Mr. Mann."

SILVER CAKE

½ cup butter
1 cup sifted sugar
2 cups cake flour
3 tsps. baking powder
4 whites of eggs
1-3 cup milk
½ tsp. almond extract
Grated rind of lemon.

Cream butter, add sugar and continue beating. Sift flour once, measure, sift with baking powder three times, add alternately to the butter mixture with the milk, beat thoroughly until smooth, add flavoring. Fold in very carefully the whites of eggs, beaten light but not dry. Butter and flour a pan 12x8 inches. MOCK SHERBET

½ tsp. salt
2 lemons
1 cup sugar
2 cups boiling water
2 egg whites.

Cook together tapioca, salt, sugar and water in double boiler until clear, stirring often. Five minutes before removing from fire add juice of 2 lemons and the grated rind. Pour mixture into a cold platter. As soon as edges begin to jelly, add the well beaten egg whites. Beat until very light and fenny. Serve very cold in sherbet glasses with whipped cream, topping each with a marashino cherry.—Mrs. J. B. Marsters, East Sandwich, Mass.

CHICKEN WIGGLES

1 cup milk
¼ cup cream
2 egg yolks
2 tsps. butter
1 tsp. salt
1 cup chicken
½ cups peas
½ cup celery
½ cup walnut meats

Scald milk and cream in double boiler. Add well beaten egg yolks, butter and salt. Cook until it thickens, then add chicken, cut in cubes washed and drained peas, and celery cut in half-inch pieces. Cook until heated through and add nut meats. Serve hot on triangle toast. Salmon or lobster is also nice in place of chicken.—Miss Josephine Juba, 24 Bailey st., Everett.

CAULIFLOWER WITH BACON

Heat left-over bits of cauliflower in a medium white sauce. When ready to remove from heat add grated cheese and cook only enough to blend, not toughen. Have strips of crisp bacon ready and place them on and around the cauliflower.—Mrs. N. S. Batchelder, Carrabassett, Me.

Household Hints

ON WASH DAY, when you gather your clothes from the line, take along a pan of warm water and a whisk broom. Sprinkle the clothes while still on the line, then take them down and fold them in the clothes basket. You will avoid handling the clothes twice.

When stitching sheer material, use newspaper underneath to prevent drawing of the material. Place goods over one thickness of paper and proceed with your sewing. Paper is easily removed and you do not have a drawn seam.

Butter the edges of cut cheese to keep it from drying and then store in a cool place. It will keep a long time.—Mrs. E. L. Bilodeau, 466 Groveland st., Haverhill.

It can't be "just like Kotex"

Kotex protects health as well as comfort

PLEASE don't ever think a sanitary pad is "just like Kotex" because it looks the same. You need more than surface resemblance.

You need the purity of Kotex. Your health requires its hygienic safety. Its care in making.

No sanitary protection that fails to meet these standards should ever be considered. You know Kotex is safe. You know hospitals use it.

This assurance of safety is beyond price. Don't give it up for the sake of a few pennies, when this saving means you may take some questionable substitute of whose makers you know nothing. Kotex assures every comfort. Amazing softness, that lasts. Scientific shaping, for comfort and inconspicuous lines. Easy disposability.

SIGNIFICANCE SEEN IN DULL TRADING

By FRANK H. MELOON

The significance which Wall and State Sts. observers read into the dull trading which has lately prevailed is that big-scale liquidation no longer overhangs the stock market. Volume continues to contract. The market usually anticipates fall improvement. While the leaders yesterday were generally off, the number of stocks that advanced, as on Saturday, outnumbered those that recorded declines.

President Melvin A. Traylor of the First National Bank of Chicago, which last week absorbed the Foreman State National in an $$ $ 2.0 0 0,0 0 0 0 merger, has had a great deal written about him since the big deal was consummated. One writer even exhausted considerable space telling how Mr. Traylor likes cherry pie. Bostonians will recall Mr. Traylor on his latest visit to Boston, sitting at the right hand of President Benjamin A. Franklin of Associated Industries of Massachusetts at the convention of that organization at the Copley-Plaza. Mr. Traylor just naturally shone as an orator on finance.

Melvin A. Traylor

Newspaper clippings show that in 1928 Mr. Traylor predicted accurately the "day of reckoning" that was to come in 1929. It is to be hoped he will find it needless to make such a dire prophecy in the future.

Many of New England's summer visitors will miss genial Elmer C. Howe, dead at Weston. Mr. Howe, as a Boston dealer in antiques, numbered the nation's wealthiest citizens among his patrons. A few months ago Henry Ford, long a personal friend of Mr. Howe, bought $45,000 worth of antique furniture in a half hour's inspection of Mr. Howe's Back Bay store.

Mr. Howe came to Boston from Barrington, N. H., a little town near Rochester. Former Mayor Malcolm E. Nichols also came to Boston from Barrington. Frank Jones left Barrington with a pedlar's tin pack on his back to become a multi-millionaire brewer. Mgr. Francis Spellman, now at the Vatican, is a summer resident of Barrington.

General Manager C. C. Hanch of the National Association of Finance Companies, says there exists today in the United States a potential demand for more than 5,000,000 automobiles because of obsolete models now on the roads.

"Of the 24,324,000 cars in use at the beginning of the year, 4,519,000 were made in 1929," said Mr. Hanch. "At the beginning of 1931 there were more 1928 and 1926 cars in use than 1930 models. There were 92,000 automobiles of vintages earlier than 1918 still running. Of the 1923 models there were still 1,843,000 in use and of earlier makes 1,847,000."

Within a few feet of the historic Plymouth Rock this week we saw two Cadillacs and a Franklin of models of more than a decade ago. All the obsolete models to which Mr. Hanch refers are not necessarily "junk." Many of them are a tribute to the fine building of American automotive leaders.

The Cape Cod canal, which means much to Boston as a port, is greatly in need of widening. It is our understanding that a $20,000,000 federal development will be carried out in this busy summer resort and shipping area.

Onset Sunday was the most crowded of the beach resorts we have seen outside the metropolitan area. The police handled the traffic in model fashion, eliminating all semblance of a tieup. By the way, ex-Mayor John F. Fitzgerald, leader in Boston's financial circles and elsewhere, has a large following at Onset. We heard him speak there several months ago, and the crowd would have been creditable as a rally gathering almost anywhere.

S. Sloan Colt, vice-president of Bankers Trust Co. for a little over one year, has been elected president to succeed Henry J. Cochran, who will become vice-chairman. Mr. Colt was graduated from Groton and Yale. Mr. Colt has the unusual experience of participating in the management with three officials who have succeeded him in the presidency.

President John J. Palley of the New Haven states that carrier is prepared to inaugurate auxiliary seaplane passenger service between New York and Boston, provided there is sufficient public demand for its establishment.

Today's News of Live Stocks in Wall Street

Leaders for the greater part drifted slightly lower during most of today's Wall Street session. Trading was again very dull. Rails led the market upward in the last hour

Westinghouse Off on Dividend Rumor

Bears today industriously circulated a rumor that Westinghouse Electric would further reduce its cash dividend, and succeeded in depressing the issue a little more. There were stories of the attack on Westinghouse being aimed at a Boston buyer reported an "exbear" but the latest information is that this gentleman has no cause for worry in connection with this particular issue.

Chrysler Aided by New Model Report

Report from Detroit that Walter P. Chrysler would enter the low-priced field against Ford and Chevrolet in a "war" to wrest away some of the big business of these motors aided. Chrysler stock. Chrysler during most of today's session made the best showing among the low-priced automotive issues.

Profits Results Will Show Mixed

Bears raised the question today of the effect of poor second-quarter earnings statements, which will begin to make their appearance about the middle of July. Not in every case will they be worse than those of the first quarter, and the problem now is to ferret out stocks of the companies that have been maintaining income on a favorable basis in that period

May Department Stores Sales Idea

Interest was aroused in the advertisement last week of May Department Stores stating its willingness to purchase large quantities of choice seasonable merchandise at attractive price concessions for cash. This is looked upon as a step to increase retail business. Many believe that with lower prices for many lines it will be possible to develop an increased demand and bring up the volume of sales materially in the coming months.

General American Tank's Orders

Like other railroad equipment companies, General American Tank has felt the lack of new orders from the carriers. However, the company is in a better position than its competitors because it has been the leader in the development of new equipment for transportation of various liquids in bulk. One important factor in its affairs is its leasing of special cars. This has been the big aid during the period when manufacturing activities were at a low rate

Buying Consistent in International Telephone

Many rumors have been heard to account for the encouraging action of International Telephone & Telegraph in the past few weeks. One of the latest reports is that the company has taken an option for 60 days for the purchase of one of the large telephone monopolies owned by Kreuger & Toll. There does not appear to be any concerted effort to push the stock ahead spectacularly, but consistent buying has been evident, particularly when minor recessions have occurred

U. S. Steel Corp.'s Act Inconsistent

Disclosure that the Steel Corporation has begun weeding out white-collar employes shows a step inconsistent with its supposed policy of staggering employment so as to maintain the number of its employes. The revelation was a mild market factor.

Coca-Cola Has Costs Lowered

Important buying has been reported in Coca-Cola in the past week or so. Part of it has been credited to Southern interests. It is the opinion that the stock has been taken because the company purchased a large supply of sugar around the low levels. This will enable a reduction in costs and bring about a good increase in the ratio of net to gross income

Noranda Affected by Low Prices

Noranda Mines has been affected with other copper companies by the low prices for the metal and the unfavorable statistical position with the surplus of the red metal piling up. However, leading interests in the company who accumulated a long line of the stock some time ago have not disposed of their holdings. They purchased because of the gold developments indicated for the future and have expressed the view that the stock will again be a favorite when interest is revived in the companies affected by the precious metal.

Foreign Power Offered on Bulges

Knowledge that current earnings of American & Foreign Power are running at a rate of approximately 75 cents a share annually are inducing increased selling in the stock on moderate bulges. Earnings of the company are being adversely affected by the depressed business conditions in countries served by its subsidiaries.

Du Pont Continues Well Bought on Dips

Action of Du Pont indicates that the stock is being well bought on minor recessions. Part of this buying is traced to interests close to the company, while at the same time increased speculative buying is attracted on the tips due to reports that current operations are running ahead of the first quarter of 1931.

Stockholders of New York Company Opposed

Powerful stockholders of the New York company are determined to oppose the consolidation unless the terms are modified. It was remarked here immediately after the government announced its willingness to accept the court's ruling that the participants in the merger were less anxious to consummate the deal.

LEGAL LISTING NO PROOF BOND IS BEST GRADE

Lake Placid, N. Y., June 16—The fact that certain bonds are included on State legal lists for investment by savings banks does not of itself assure the high quality of the issues, the New York State League of Savings and Loan Associations was told here today by F. Shea, vice-president of Moody's Investors Service.

Discussing investment policies before the 44th annual convention of the league, Mr. Shea stressed the necessity of constant supervision of bond accounts, with particular attention to issues in danger of removal from the legal list, either because of general economic trends or of individual developments.

"A recent compilation shows that over 12 per cent of total assets of mutual savings banks, or more than one billion dollars, is now invested in railroad securities," he stated. "Certain of these bonds have recently been removed from the legal list, while others of medium quality have just managed to meet the requirements.

"Some which have been removed from the approved class because fixed charges were earned less than one and one-half times are in reality of much higher quality and are fundamentally more desirable from an investment standpoint."

Despite the current poor operating results of the railroads, the speaker asserted that the carriers will be among the first to experience the results of general business recovery.

LOANS CHARTED IN BULLETIN

New York Stock Exchange June bulletin contains charts illustrating monthly movements of brokers' loans since first compiled. Series originating with Federal Reserve Bank of New York was inaugurated Oct. 5, 1917, and has been compiled each week. Stock Exchange series was commenced October 1918, and was discontinued after Dec. 1, 1922, but has appeared monthly since resumption Feb. 1926.

To keep figures for 1918-1922 and 1926-1931 on a consistent basis there have been omitted from 1919-1922 figures loans effected outside New York, and also special loans on United States securities having to do with war-time financing.

"Perhaps the most striking features of these statistics at present," says the Exchange, "are the return of the totals to the general levels of the earlier part of 1926 and disappearance of the large excess of Stock Exchange over reserve member figures. In recent periods reserve loans have sometimes exceeded those of the Stock Exchange."

The total market value June 1 of all bonds listed was $47,629,698,234, against $48,282,336,086 May 1, a decrease of $652,637,852

Macy Units Sales Increase 42 P. C.

New York, June 16—Vice-president Collins of R. H. Macy & Co told the National Retail Dry Goods Association the number of transactions in the Macy store last week were 42 per cent ahead of corresponding week last year. The Macy group of stores, he said, have had a very large increase in dollar sales the past two weeks, and an even larger gain in number of transactions. The cause of the gain has been Macy's recent advertising offering merchandise at record low prices.

RAILS RALLIED IN LAST HOUR IN WALL ST.

New York, June 16 (AP)—The stock market in Wall st was bolstered by a rally in the rail shares near the close of one of the dullest sessions in the past five years today.

Shares drifted lower during most of the session, but early losses were largely recovered, and the list displayed a strong tone in the final dealings. The turnover was only about 1,100,000 shares.

IMMEDIATE ACTION

Carrier issues had been conspicuously heavy during the earlier hours of trading, as profit taking continued in advance of filing of the higher freight rate petition, due tomorrow.

Report that the petition would request immediate action on the proposed higher schedule, rather than the usual 90-day suspension, may have been a factor in the late upturn.

Early losses of 2 points in Atchison, Union Pacific and Norfolk & Western were replaced by gains of 1 to 3. Northern Pacific, however closed 2 lower and Canadian Pacific lost about a point.

Chrysler sold up a point, in response to report of a new low-priced model, and Eastman gained 2.

U. S. Steel and General Electric closed fractionally higher. American Telephone and American Can were among issues gaining a point or more. Westinghouse finished off a point.

MONEY IS FIRMER

With the unsettling prospect of a special session of the German Reichstag, dimming, the foreign markets continued to improve, as did foreign bonds in the New York market.

The possibility of the overthrow of the Bruening government at a session of the Reichstag at this time had been a disturbing factor in international finance.

The growing insistence in Germany upon a revision of reparations payments, however, projects an element of uncertainty which Wall Street expects will endure for some months.

Slightly firmer tone noted in the money market yesterday, with no call money offered under the official rate of 1½ per cent, was maintained, presumably still reflecting the quarterly income tax settlements and Treasury financing.

In railroad issues both Canadian Pacific and Northern Pacific were sold in response to reports of serious drouth conditions in the Northwest and in Canada.

U. S. Steel was helped by efforts of steel sheet producers to bolster prices, although increased schedules announced are not expected to have much effect before August. Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit declined with the rejection of the Untermyer consolidation plan.

Prices Are Mixed in the Bond Market

New York, June 16—Price movements in bonds were highly irregular today. Led by German loans, the foreign group staged an encouraging upward movement. Sporadic activity developed among railroad issues which were generally lower. Industrial bonds dropped lower also but the declines among them were principally fractional.

Feeling Improved on Berlin Boerse

Brlin, June 16—With the Boerse firm and demand for exchange reduced to about 80,000,000 reichsmarks against 100,000,000 Saturday and 200,000,000 Friday, there is an improved feeling, but there is still considerable anxiety over the political situation.

Burst of Strength Appears on Curb

New ork, June 16—A closing burst of strength in the late trading on the curb market today undid much of the damage sustained in the forenoon reaction. With the exception of a handful of selected issue, final prices showed but slight variations from previous closing levels.

Grains Are Uneven at Chicago Close

Chicago, June 16—Grains were uneven at today's close. Wheat finished unchanged to 1 cent lower, corn ⅛-⅜ advance, oats ⅛-¼ off and provisions varying from 5 cents decline to a rise of 10 cents.

Securities Auction to Be Held Thursday

The weekly offering of securities at auction, usually held on Wednesday, will take place Thursday this week, due to the observance of Bunker Hill Day.

Bread Price Raised From 5 to 6 Cents

Minneapolis, June 16—Price of unwrapped loaves of bread here and in St. Paul has been advanced to six from five cents.

Cotton Higher in New York Market

New York, June 16—Cotton futures today closed 25 to 27 points higher. July 8.81-83, Oct. 9.19-20, Dec. 9.43-44, Jan. 9.52-54, March 9.74, May 9.93-94. Spot steady; middling 8.95.

STATE STREET SIDELIGHTS

State St brokers are convinced that the real feature of the summer market will be dullness such as has been witnessed in the last two sessions. While prices are expected to work irregularly higher in the near future the movement will be so slow that the average trader will retire to the sidelines rather than wait the market out in order to make small profits.

* * *

The mixed trend of leading shares is attributed by some observers to the shifting tactics of a reformed bear. At the start of the current upswing he is said to have favored speculative shares, now it is rumored he has replaced these with banking favorites such as Central Allied Chemical and Union Carbide.

Several months ago, the mere mention of some fancied development in Auburn was enough to send the shares violently upward. Now, a well-founded rumor the company has completed plans for the marketing of a 12-cylinder car, to sell at $1150, is quietly received and only moderate buying is witnessed.

* * *

Announcement by Best that two more stores had been opened, bringing the companies chain to a total of 10, was of more than ordinary interest to traders who favor this equity as the leader in its group. Since many of the branches cater to summer trade, it should benefit from the better than ordinary demand reported for summer wear.

High Grade Issues Buying Is Favored

Expressing belief that the present time offers unusual opportunities to accumulate high grade securities, Hornblower & Weeks, in their June Investment Review, point out the tremendous response to recent Government financing. They see in it concrete evidence of the idle funds which are ready for investment purposes when and as there are indications of a general business improvement.

Life and Annuity Companies Merged

Des Moines, June 16 (AP)—Merger of the Des Moines Life and Annuity Company with the Royal Union Life Insurance Company was effected. The new company has a capital stock of $2,000,000. The merged institution will be known as the Royal Union Company.

Skelly Action on Preferred Omitted

Meeting of the directors of Skelly Oil Co. was adjourned Monday until June 22. No action was taken on quarterly dividend of $1.50 on the 6 per cent cumulative preferred.

AMERICAN ICE CO.

K. L. H., Weymouth—It seems to me that now is the time to buy ice company issues. Does American Ice Co. control the Boston Ice Co.? Tell me something, please, about American Ice. Co.

Ans.—Yes, Boston Ice Co is a subsidiary of the American Ice Co. American Ice Co. is the leading manufacturer and distributor of ice in the North Atlantic territory, operating also extensive storage facilities. It handles coal to offset the winter slackness in ice sales, and in this field is meeting the growing competition from oil burners by the distribution of fuel oil. Solicitation of new customers in household and commercial fields thus far has counteracted competition from mechanical refrigeration but the ability to continue this development over a period of years, in our judgment, is somewhat uncertain.

The expenditure of approximately $3,500,000 last year for the acquisition of new plants and reconditioning of old facilities materially weakened the company's financial position. Current liabilities as of March 31, last, exceeded current assets, and cash of $767,593 was more than offset by notes payable of $1,875,000. Because of this condition the usual $1 extra dividend on the common was omitted early this year, and continuance of the regular $3 rate becomes conjectural.

A deficit of $0.29 a share was reported on the common for the initial 1931 quarter compared with a loss in the corresponding 1930 period of $0.25. Despite this unpropitious seasonal experience, a relatively favorable full year showing should be recorded, provided weather conditions are reasonably satisfactory, says Standard Statistics. Last year earnings amounted to $4.16 a share, against $4.33 in 1929. Prior to 376,100 shares of no par common stock, the company has 144,043 shares of 6 per cent non-cumulative, $100 par, preferred and $5,694,000 funded debt.

UNITED CORPORATION

M. A. R., Scituate—I enclose a list of my holdings. Is United Corp. a suitable addition?

Ans.—You have a good investment background and the stock appears suitable for you. During recent sessions on the stock exchange the action of United Corporation shares appeared to suggest large-scale accumulation of a type which looks not to the immediate future but to the longer term prospects.

Such buying undoubtedly is predicated upon belief in the United as the logical leader, not alone of the public utility list, but of the market as well. Ranking as a leader of the public utilities is properly due United, in view of its dominant though minority interests in the great utility properties of the eastern portion of the country.

Its vast security ownership in United Gas Improvement, Public Service of New Jersey, Columbia Gas & Electric, Consolidated Gas of New York, Commonwealth & Southern and Niagara-Hudson assures United participation immediately in any general business improvement.

From an equity standpoint, United probably is selling close to its break-up value. Its yield on the 75-cent dividend is less than 3½ per cent.

United, nevertheless, holds distinct speculative appeal. Notwithstanding past experience, it is very likely that the Morgan-Bonbright sponsorship for United will again exert tremendous influence when the market reaches a happier stage. There will be repeated mergers and other deals to constantly stir up interest in United. The stock has virtually every qualification to become a market leader.

I. R. T. MOVE IS ATTACKED

New York, June 16—Directors of Interborough Rapid Transit Co and Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit Corp adopted resolutions declining to participate in hearings before the transit commission on the revised unification plan prepared by Samuel Untermyer, special counsel for the city in rapid transit matters.

They base their action on grounds that the hearings are not in accordance with the law, in that the commission has taken no action on valuations, and that there has been no assurance from board of estimate or any of its members that the portion of the price for the properties proposed to be paid in city corporate stock or cash will be forthcoming.

The action was taken at meetings after the first hearing on the revised Untermyer plan, at which valuations prepared by bureau of unification and transit readjustment submitted a valuation of properties considered in unification.

The bureau's report said the maximum the city can pay for properties is $503,540,205, terming this the maximum statutory limitation on valuations. Valuation was made as of June 30, 1930. Action of directors of the two corporations is a direct blow at Mr. Untermyer.

Broadway Corp. Is Cancelling Bonds

Paramount Broadway Corp., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Paramount Publix Corp., has delivered for cancellation to Chemical Bank & Trust Co., trustee, $125,000 par value of its first mortgage 5½ per cent bonds secured by mortgage on the Paramount Building, New York city. Original issue of these bonds was $10,000,000 and after the cancellation of the foregoing $125,000 there will be issued and outstanding $9,250,000 par value of this issue.

Eastern Financing Planned for Marmon

MAT CHAMPION LOST TWO BROTHERS IN WORLD WAR

FANNING

By GEORGE UNDERWOOD

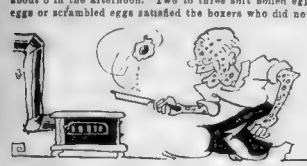
'Ow Do You Like Your H'eggs? Sunnyside H'up?

Somewhere abaft the sports page you will see Max Schmeling sitting down to breakfast. Which leads to the all-important query, "What does a champion have for his breakfast?" "How does he like his oysters?" Raw! Raw! Raw! Well, Reginald, what does a champion have for his breakfast? We've sat down with quite a few of 'em. Let's see we had breakfast with Jeffries at Allenhurst, Fitzsimmons at Bath Beach, Jack Johnson at Weinert's, Dempsey in many training resorts, Tunney at Speculator, Silver Lake and Saratoga, Paolino among the pines and spruces in Han's Ehmler's beautiful place in the Valley of the Owls, Benny Leonard at Budd Lake, Al Singer at Hoosick Falls and the Delaware Water Gap, Tommy Loughran at Harvey's Lake, Harry Wills and Paul Berlenbach at Cap Jones' hangout on beautiful Peconic Bay, Jack Sharkey in various training places and Max Schmeling at Endicott. So we'll try to tell you what a champion has for breakfast.

The bill of fare runs in the main about the same with all of 'em. Fruits and cereals are on all breakfast training tables. Dempsey liked his prunes and lots of 'em. So did the old-timers Jeff and Fitz. Schmeling like stewed prunes, too. Tunney's taste ran to oranges, canteloupe and grapefruit. Those fruits were on the table of those who liked prunes also. An athlete in training can't eat too much fruit for breakfast.

Some of the boxers ate no meat with the morning meal, others liked lamb chops and some even had a broiled steak. The old-timers had three square meals a day. The more modern and present-day crop of boxers almost all limit themselves to two meals a day while in training, breakfast from 8 to 10 and dinner about 5 in the afternoon. Two to three soft boiled eggs, poached eggs or scrambled eggs satisfied the boxers who did not eat meat.



Bob Fitzsimmons was the only fighter, we knew, who used to have fried eggs for breakfast. And Bob used to like to fry 'em himself, too. The big freckled-faced, red-headed son-of-a-gun used to love to toss 'em in the air from the frying-pan and catch 'em coming down. Bob used to insist on frying eggs for his visitors. We think he did it to give himself a chance to display his skill at juggling them. We can hear him yet in his combination of Cockney and Australian inquiring:

"Ow do you like your h'eggs? Sunny side h'up?"

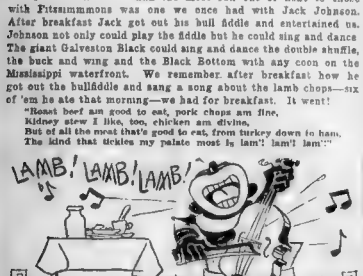
The breakfast we had the most fun out of next to those with Fitzsimmons was one we once had with Jack Johnson. After breakfast Jack got out his bull fiddle and entertained us. Johnson not only could play the fiddle but he could sing and dance The giant Galveston Black could sing and dance the double shuffle, the buck and wing and the Black Bottom with any coon on the Mississippi waterfront. We remember after breakfast how he got out the bullfiddle and sang a song about the lamb chops—six of 'em he ate that morning—we had for breakfast. It went!

"Roast beef am good to eat, pork chops am fine,
Kidney stew I like, too, chicken am divine,
But of all the meat that's good to eat, from turkey down to ham,
The kind that tickles my palate most is lam'! lam'! lam'!"



Benny Leonard, the world's lightweight champion, trained on a strictly kosher diet. No butter, for instance, was permitted on the table. Whatever fowl or meat was partaken of had to be killed by the rabbi. Al Singer, another Jewish boy, who held the world's lightweight title, was not orthodox when training. But Al's training place at Delaware Water Gap was kosher and most of the guests ate kosher meals.

Some of the boxers had coffee for breakfast and some, even, tea. Fitz was a tea drinker. Many of the fighters, however, abstain from coffee, limiting themselves to milk. If we recollect rightly, Gene Tunney had a cup of weak coffee with his breakfast, but drank copiously of milk, also. Tunney was a great milk drinker. He not only had milk with his two meals, but also drank plenty of it between meals.

Max Schmeling has some kind of wheat or bran substitute for coffee. Whatever it is, Max is "pushing it," for he gets some kind of financial rakeoff from it, like he does from other things he eats and wears. Joe Jacobs is on the job and Max scarcely breathes without getting paid for it.

The breakfasts we most enjoyed were those with Paolino at Hoosick Falls. Basque cooking can't be beat. Paolino was a great fruit and vegetable eater. He, himself, would eat a compote of fruit for breakfast which would contain half a dozen oranges and half a dozen canteloupes alone. Paolino's Basque chef was a wonder at cooking vegetables and serving fresh ones. The Basque Woodchopper had no meat for his breakfast and ate sparingly of flesh foods at dinner. But, oh, the piles of vegetables that woodchopper from the Pyrenees used to stow away!

At ice-box and pantry Jeffries beat the yeggs.
But when it came to vegtables, Paolino had no match,

SWIDERSKI IS VICTOR OVER BABE HUNT

By JACK CONWAY

Paul Swiderski scored a comparatively easy victory over Babe Hunt in their 10-round bout at an Argoane A. A. show at Braves Field. This writer gave Swiderski all but the opening round, which saw Hunt out front.

In the third frame Swiderski dropped Hunt to the canvas with a left hook to the jaw. Swiderski became wildly excited and belted Hunt on the chin with a right hand wallop while the Oklahoma warrior was on the floor.

Jack Conway

This was illegal and Referee Johnny Martin could have awarded the decision to Hunt on a foul. Babe however, didn't set up any claim of foul. Instead he hopped to his feet and fought back as best he could.

The crowd showed its disapproval of two out-of-town boxers meeting in a main bout here when it booed and hissed when the action slowed down in the seventh round. From then until the bout ended the milling was slow in spots.

Arcelli Wins, but Does Not Get the Decision

Werter Acelli, Italian lightweight, won from Leslie Baker of Watertown, but didn't get the decision. Arcelli carried seven of the ten rounds. Baker copped the fourth session, and made a flash which carried him out front in the ninth and tenth heats. The other rounds saw Arcelli setting the pace.

Arcelli almost stopped Baker with a left hook punch to the jaw in the third heat. Baker was groggy following this punch, but managed to weather the storm.

George Nichols of Buffalo, disposed of Rosy Rossles of Cleveland in four sessions. Rossles dropped Nichols in the first round, but was on the floor himself in the final heat.

They Called It a Baseball Game

—By MYLES T. McSWEENEY—

They laughed when I put on a baseball glove.

"Wait till I get you home."

"Come home, Dave, you've had enough.

The single men won, 86 gallons to 78.

The umpire? He had an awful cold.

Jack Conway Has 4 Winners Out of 5 Picks

Prime Carnera defeated Pat Redmond, Ernie Schaaf upset Jack Gagnon, Paul Swiderski conquered Babe Hunt, while Jim Londos proved that Tiny Roebuck is just another wrestler.

THE SOCOKRAT AT THE BREAKFAST TABLE

JACOBS — WEINMAN — SCHMELING — MACHON

What does a champion have for breakfast? Well, here's MAX SCHMELING, world heavyweight champion, third from left, flanked by OTTO WEINMAN, the chef, and MAX MACHON, the trainer, with manager JOE JACOBS as the fourth member, sitting down to breakfast at his training camp. Jacobs looks as if the breakfast disagreed with him. And we hope Max isn't calling down the chef! But what does a champion have for breakfast? George Underwood tells you what the champions have for breakfast in his FANNING, today. He knows, too, for he has been in many champs' training camps.

MUDDY RUEL AT RICE SCHOOL

The visit today of Harold "Muddy" Ruel of the Red Sox to the Rice school made bright a gloomy day for the school children. Ruel went to the school, at the request of Master Thomas J. Barry and Submaster Thomas Craven of the Rice school, to present awards to members of the winning baseball teams of the playgrounds season.

Ruel addressed the student body. He presented certificates and bats to Samuel George, James Deeb, Vassil Damatin and William Boonisar, captains of the winning teams in the fifth, sixth, seventh and eight grades.

Sports at Outing of Holy Name Club

An attractive program of sports has been arranged for the 300 members of the Catholic Club of the Holy Name Church, West Roxbury, who will have their first annual outing and field day tomorrow at Fieldston-on-the-Atlantic.

100,000 to See Crews at Poughkeepsie

By BILL CORUM

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., June 16 (INS)—While close to 100,000 persons peer through the purpling twilight across the broad bosom of the Hudson this evening, nine mighty college crews will come sweeping down the last long mile to settle for all time the question of eight-oared rowing supremacy for the year 1931.

Columbia, Cornell, Syracuse, Navy, M. I. T. and Pennsylvania from the East, Wisconsin from the Middle West, and Washington and California from the far-off Pacific coast, are due to match their skill and brawn over the testing four-mile course.

Well, as the writer sees it, Columbia, Cornell and Syracuse, the all-New York State armada, will be the trio that will be tossing back spray onto their rivals.

The Columbia should be first of all. Perfectly coached by the younger Glendon, perfectly trained by the veteran Doc Barrett and protected by the sheltered No. 2 line—the rabbit's foot line—on the west shore, the light blue, white-tipped blades of the Sea Lions from Morningside will have no excuse.

Beyond question, the greatest sprinting crew of the East, with four straight easily-won victories behind them, it is only a question if the big city boys can go the distance.

HORNSBY IS ON THE BENCH

Chicago, June 16 (AP)—Rogers Hornsby, boss of the Cubs, practices what he preaches even if his preaching affects himself.

He has benched himself because he was not delivering with his war club.

Ever since he took over the managerial reins of the Cubs, Hornsby frankly advised his players that they would stay in the lineup as long as they delivered. So yesterday he scanned over the batting averages and decided Manager Hornsby should take the rest cure.

RUMRILL 7-5 FAVORITE

"Jumbo" Rumrill, so-called "Bear of Vermont," is a 7 to 5 favorite to win the New England heavyweight wrestling championship over "Tiger" Jack Young, the B. C. football star, when they clash at the Revere cycle track tomorrow night.

Although Young is a flashy, fast worker and has wrestled 22 bouts, all of which he has won, it is felt that Rumrill is too heavy and experienced for him.

Rumrill is a tough customer, hailing from Vermont, where he has been lumber jacking when not engaged in bouts. Previous to taking up wrestling, Rumrill was a well known heavyweight boxer in California. He tips the scales at 265 pounds and can really be called a man mountain. He has won 47 of his last 50 bouts, so that Young, who weighs 205, will need all his college football experience in addition to his wrestling experience to be able to get a fall.

This fray is best two out of three falls to a positive finish, and the winner will be crowned New England champion.

SAMUEL GEORGE JAMES DEEB VASSIL DAMATIN WILL BOONISAR MUDDY RUEL

Harold "Muddy" Ruel, Red Sox catcher, brought sunshine and smiles to the Rice school today when he presented trophies to the captains of the winning baseball teams of the school. "Muddy" spoke to the school children. He made them forget the gloom and rain. The gang gave "Muddy" a great reception.

DEGLANE WAS "KID" AT FRONT

By HENRI DeGLANE

(As told to Jack Conway)

There were seven of us. And all boys.

Now I can understand why the tears streamed down my mother's cheeks when France sounded the call to the colors at the opening of the World War. She knew the marks made by war.

I was then 13 years of age. I was not old enough to take my place in the front line trenches, but a year later I was trucking wine to the front, as I have already described.

Two of my brothers responded to the call to arms. They were Gabriel, who was in the infantry, and Jean, a member of the cavalry. Like myself, my other brothers were too young to carry arms.

The first two years of war were terrible ones for France. The toll in dead and wounded and loss of property was staggering.

One day a messenger appeared at our home in Paris and handed my father a telegram from the war department. It read "Your son, Gabriel DeGlane, was killed in action while serving France."

It was a hard blow for us all, particularly for my mother. Gabriel was her eldest son, and she had always confided in him. Now he was dead, a victim of the war.

A few months later my father received another telegram from the War Department. It read

Two Brothers Die

"Your son, Jean DeGlane, was killed in action while serving France."

A few months later mother died. The loss of her two boys in addition to the other hardships caused by the war had shattered her health.

Perhaps there will always be wars, killing the flower of our youth, breaking the hearts of mothers.

The best way to prevent war is to be prepared. People do not attack those who are strong. The same is true of governments.

My younger brother, Paul, is today drilled with a French cavalry regiment in Africa. I hope there will not be any more wars, but if there are, the French army will follow the colors of France into battle.

With my two brothers killed in action and my mother dead, I trucked wine to the front.

When I was 14, I decided to join the fire department of Paris. It was a semi-military organization under control of the government. We had guns as well as horses, and drilled.

France used its fire departments to school young men in warfare, that they would be properly trained when sent to the front. Members of the fire department also maintained order in the large cities.

I can remember how my younger brothers, Paul, Andre, Ludovic and Marcel, envied me when I appeared home for the first time dressed out in the uniform of the Paris fire department. I think any 14-year-old American boy would feel much as I did if made a full member of the fire department of Boston, New York or some other big city.

You can now understand why I always like firemen, and why I hurry to the scene of big fires.

Loved Athletics

I believe all fire departments should be semi-military organizations. In times of emergencies, the firemen would then be prepared to

CARNERA FELLS IRISH GIANT IN FIRST ROUND

SCHAAF WINS BOUT IN 46 SECS.

New York, June 16—Prime Beef Carnera made hamburger of ponderous Pat Redmond in two minutes and 24 seconds at Ebbets Field last night.

These behemoths of bust were laughed into a big attraction, and the 25,000 who came in the drizzling rain to snicker went home thinking that there was more than mere size to the gigantic Italian. The show drew $36,000, and would easily have done $50,000 if it was not for the rain.

Carnera then hooked two rib crushers to the Irishman's heart, followed by a vicious right to the jaw.

Redmond dropped as if he had been shot. It was several seconds before Redmond was revived and could leave the ring.

It now appears that Carnera has been sufficiently built up to fight the winner of the Schmeling-Stribling affair.

Ernie Schaaf of Boston stopped Jack Gagnon, also of Boston, in 46 seconds. Tom Kirby of Boston lost the decision to Ted Sandwina after ten rounds of boxing.

LONG CONTRACT FOR PANTHER

Joe Malcewicz, Utica Panther, today signed a contract with Paul Bowser under the terms of which he has agreed to wrestle exclusively under the direction of the Boston promoter for the next three years in the event he wins from Henri DeGlane, world's heavyweight champion, in their finish bout, best two falls out of three, at the Arena on Thursday night.

Malcewicz has won 24 bouts in a row. Bowser wished to safeguard his future as a promoter in the event the Panther makes it 25 straight by disposing of DeGlane Thursday night.

Malcewicz is the fastest wrestler in the world, also the most finished. He has been close to winning the title for several years, and now is presented with his big opportunity.

It is understood that the Crosscup-Pishon Post of the American Legion, which is going to stage a wrestling show at Braves Field on July 14, is angling for the services of Malcewicz, DeGlane and George.

GOOD GOLF

By CHESTER HORTON
"Golf's Greatest Teacher"

I notice a greatly increasing number of letters from women golfers in my mail. Women players have two common faults—they overswing and they fail to make a solid contact against the ground with their feet. The woman player invariably lifts her left heel much too high. Women have weak wrists for golfing work, as a rule, and should therefore adopt a more restricted back swing, which will keep in parallel much better. In the back swing keep arms, wrists and clubhead even until the club turns over and draws up the wrists at the top. Stop at that point, pause momentarily, with balance and poise, then return the club. Quick wrist-breaking only accentuates weak wrists, the wrists-breaking away from the ball, going back, speeding the club so rapidly that the wrists lack the power to arrest it, hence the common fault of overswinging. This leads to topping. Take a firm, but no rigid, grip and design to stop the back swing about shoulder-high. Hold the head still, stiffen the right leg, keep the left arm curved-straight and see the ball.

SIX RACES AT COUNTRY CLUB

The complete entry list and weights for the opening day program of the Eastern Horse Club race meet at The Country Club, Brookline, tomorrow afternoon, was announced this morning by Bayard Tuckerman, Jr., chairman of the board of stewards. Six races make up the card, with the first race to start at 2:30.

In the Challenge Cup Steeplechase top weight has been given to Augustus F. Goodwin's Land Boy, winner last year, and Price McKinney's Golden Gorse. Both will be asked to carry 175 pounds over the gruelling 2½-mile test for registered hunters.

The Chamblet Memorial, second stake steeplechase to be raced off tomorrow afternoon, top weight has been placed on Flying Horse Farm's Moholi, winner of two starts this year, and Toreador 2d, and on F. Ambrose Clark's Crumpler. This trio has been rated to carry 155 pounds.

Other top weight carriers listed for the first day's races are Rigan McKinney's Spice and James Simpson's Gormond, both of which carry 145 pounds in the first race. Red Rocket and Banks, Jr., will pace 167 in the second race. William L. Elkins' South Hamilton is down to carry 170 in the Chestnut Hill Horse Show steeplechase, while F. Ambrose Clark's campaigner, Knockalong Tom, has 158 in the last race, the Norfolk Hunt Club steeplechase.

Sonnenberg Wins Over Demetral

Manchester N. H., June 16 (AP)—Gus Sonnenberg defeated Bill Demetral of Chicago, two falls out of three, in a wrestling match here last night. Demetral took the first fall with a back fall in 15 minutes. Sonnenberg put over his flying tackle for the second in 19 minutes and took the third in four minutes with a body scissors.

NOBLE STAR IS ASCOT WINNER

Ascot, Eng., June 16 (AP)—F. H. W. Cundell's Noble Star today won the Ascot Stakes.

Montague Evans' Blue Vision was second and M. E. de Starlary's Bonny Boy was third. Twenty-one horses ran.

Noble Star, by Hapsburg from Hesper, won by three-quarters of a length. There was half a length between the second and third horses. The winner took the $10,000 stakes with no extras over the two-mile course.

The betting was 10 to 1, 20 to 1 and 100 to 7.

Probably 100,000 persons comprised the nearly record crowd that thronged the enclosures, the huge grandstand and the open spaces.

It was a gay array for it included the highest of British nobility and English society in seasonable attire, playing the game of fashion for all its worth with the encouragement of the presence of practically the entire royal family.

At 14 I was large for my age. I had a natural love for athletics. In my spare time, I went in for wrestling, throwing the javelin, rugby, hunting and fishing.

It was no until the war ended that I could devote as much time to athletics as I wished.

In France, the government devotes considerable time and money to promoting athletics and physical development. The war taught France that perfectly conditioned men make the best soldiers. So when the final shot of the war was fired France decided to give more attention than ever to making its citizens physically fit.

It was a proud day for me when a government official notified me that I was considered one of the finest physical specimens in France. I was offered a chance to attend Ecole Normale Joinville le port, most famous military school in France.

I was elated at this marvelous opportunity. I resigned from the fire department and was soon once more enrolled in school.

(In tomorrow's Boston Evening American, DeGlane will tell how he developed into a star wrestler and of his early experiences in professional matches.)

'Twixt Tee and Cup

By BILL GRIMES

Although little has been written on the subject, the British Ryder Cup players, who will be at the Winchester Country Club on Friday, have played the larger and lighter ball. They participated in a tournament early this spring for the purpose of testing the American standard ball.

According to Bernard Darwin, the eminent English golf authority, the American ball did not meet with the approval of the Britons. They complained against the loss of distance playing into the wind, the drift, especially with the breeze blowing from the left and the inability to putt the new agate.

The day the British professionals played the new ball, the wind although not of hurricane velocity was strong, with the result that drives into it averaged about 20 yards shortage of the old ball. As the British seldom take to the high altitudes on approaches, Darwin did not comment on the effect of head winds against this type of shot but he did notice a pronounced drift on all shots played with a cross wind.

It was on the greens that the Britons encountered most of their trouble. They protested against the jumping of the lighter and larger ball upon being stroked and explained that this was due to the fact that the ball had been hit "below the equator."

In order to offer a real test, advocates for the abolition of the new ball are pulling for a strong breeze at Winchester on Friday afternoon. The Britons from Capt. Charlie Whitcombe down to the last alternate, are shot makers par excellence. And if they cannot make the American standard ball behave, what chance has the average players?

In all probability, the Charles River Country Club team will clinch the Boston Four Ball League title this afternoon against The Country Club. All that is required to give the championship to Capt. Frank Rapp's outfit is the winning of two points.

The Lexington Country Club course is open today for practice rounds for those who will play in the annual M. G. A. open tomorrow. The course is in fine condition, and if the weather remains fair, the usual large field will be in action.

Willie Ogg, Worcester Country Club, and Walter Cosgrovem, Green Hill, topped the field in the N. E. P. G. O. pro-pro tournament yesterday at the Kernwood Country Club with a 141.

Jack Grant, who was caddy master at Charles River for years, is anxious to return to the game. Grant is rated as the peer of all caddy masters and would be a valuable asset to any club.

Donie Bush, manager of the Chicago White Sox, played at the South Shore Country Club yesterday morning. Donie has developed into a real golf addict and never passes up an opportunity to play, if it does not interfere with baseball.

The Bristol County Country Club, which is located on the outskirts of Taunton, and is a public course, is doing a thriving business this season. Bristol County is in better condition than many of the private courses and is living up to the predictions of Eugene Wogan, who layed out the course, that within five years it would be one of the best nine holers in the state.

GARIBALDI FAILS TO APPEAR

Gino Garibaldi, Italian heavyweight wrestling champion, is still among the missing. Garibaldi was advertised to battle Rudy Dusek in the semifinal bout on Ray Fabiani's card at the Boston Garden. But he hasn't wrestled yet.

One Firpo Wilcox, a fourth rate wrestler, was offered as Dusek's victim. He went through the motions of wrestling for 14m. 8s. when he was pinned with an inside crotch hold and slam.

The crowd didn't want to see the fourth rate Wilcox wrestle Dusek and made its feelings known by boos and hisses.

The announcer didn't make any explanation as to why Garibaldi failed to put in an appearance. The crowd then started an uproar.

Many of the fans had paid good money at the box office because Garibaldi was billed to wrestle. They felt they were entitled to an explanation for his absence.

It was then announced that Garibaldi had been detained on his way to the Hub, and that Wilcox had been secured as a substitute. After the fans got a peek at Wilcox, they probably wished he, too, had been detained somewhere.

Londos Wins Over Roebuck

Jim Londos, Greek heavyweight, won from Tiny Roebuck, Indian grappler, after 37m. 21s. of wrestling. A series of flying mares and an overhead slam ended the contest.

Kamlikoff has outlived his usefulness in Boston rings. Nobody will shed any tears if he isn't matched for any more bouts at the Garden. He is merely a curiosity and knows little about wrestling.

St. Paul's Claims Victory by Default

The St. Paul's Junior Holy Name baseball team, of Cambridge, through Coach Burns, claim a nine to nothing victory over the Arlington Pals by virtue of the failure of the latter team to appear for the game scheduled yesterday for the Cambridge Common.

The strong St. Paul's team, in the emergency opposed the St. Paul's Alumni in a practice game, the latter winning 10 to 9.

Robins Want Connally

FABER IN 18TH SEASON

'RED' LAST OF A. L. SPITBALL TWIRLERS

By JOE CASHMAN

One by one, that once powerful tribe of spitball pitchers has disappeared, until today, Urban Charles Faber of the Chicago White Sox is the only one left in the American League.

Urban the Red, is now in his forty-third year and playing his eighteenth season with the Chisox, so it won't be very long before the batters in the junior circuit will have looked at their last spitter.

The disappearance of the moist delivery, a puzzle to the best of hitters, will not cause the boys to shed any tears but the passing of Faber will, for he has been one of the game's greatest pitchers and finest characters ever since he broke in.

Urban the Red has been on world's championship and last place ball clubs and he has had good seasons and bad ones, but never has he permitted success to go to his head or failure to rile him.

"Red's the prince of good fellows," says "Shano" Collins, who roomed with him for more than ten years, and every player in the league agrees with the Red Sox pilot.

Faber was born in Cascade, Iowa, and attended St. Joseph's College in his home state. Upon his graduation in 1908 he signed up with the Dubuque club and the following season he was drafted by the Pirates. He was loaned back to Dubuque in '10 and recalled the next year, only to be released to Minneapolis.

Faber Farmed to Bush Leaguers

He didn't look so hot to the Millers, so he was sent down the river to Pueblo and in 1912 he drifted to Des Moines. Late in the '13 season he attracted the attention of a White Sox scout, who purchased him for $3500.

It was at the close of that season that the White Sox and Giants made a trip around the world and "Red" asked to be taken along. There was no room in the Chicago party for him but there was a vacancy in the Giants ranks and John McGraw added the youth to his caravan.

The White Sox had plenty of pitchers at the time and intended to pay some minor league debt with Faber, but McGraw used the redhead four or five times during the tour and on every occasion he stood the American Leaguers on their heads and won a regular berth.

So he is another of a small army of ball players McGraw has befriended and probably the only player in the history of the game who made the grade on the team that owned him by making that outfit look bad.

Faber Sees Ocean for First Time

It must be recorded, though, that the 'round-theworld cruise which proved the making of him, was no joy ride for Faber. It was the first time he had seen an ocean, and if he never sees one again, it will be too soon. For almost a month he was on the water and he was never able to leave his bed. When the first pay day came around and the secretary brought his check down to the state room, Red murmured:

"You might as well feed it to the fishes, for I'm not going to live through this trip."

But live he did to cause many an opponent since to wish that he had been left stranded in some country where baseball is unknown.

In '14, his first full season with the Windy City nine, he won eight and lost the same number, and with three exceptions he won far more games than he lost in every campaign since that time.

He won 16 and lost 13 to help his mates win the 1917 pennant, and then beat the Giants three times in four starts in the World Series. In 1928, when he was 40 years old, he was good enough to win 13 in 21 starts.

Jack Quinn is the only pitcher in the big show who is older in years and Eppa Rixey is the only flinger still active who has engaged in more games or pitched more innings than Faber.

Trade Wins

colossal, absurd, undignified bartering in snide objects that is labor of mercy. Don't you forget it."

"One isn't apt to, after hearing you."

"The wisest man I ever knew, showed me the way to give back what I have earned. He never, even in his great wisdom, knew to what extent his mind was endowing mine. I refer to my friend Felix Gerkes."

"It was Felix Gerkes," Barick went on, "who first set my mind working along lines toward which I had previously had only a sort of subconscious predisposition. My friend is at once a simple and profound man."

Wisest Man

"I see," said Gratton, "where Mengelbery intimated in Berlin the other day, after commenting on Gerke's last book on the theory of life, that the Nobel prize is once more about to come to America."

"That will mean little to Gerkes."

"It should mean a great deal to you, who have made so much of his contribution to knowledge possible."

"Probably it does, Gratton. That's a snapshot of Gerkes there on the table. It came this morning."

"He has the face of a happy person. So has the woman!"

"[illegible] took his wife from the [illegible] Eskimos, whom he considers the happiest people he has ever encountered. I was about to tell you, not meaning to digress to the subject of my hobby Gerkes, that it was he who unconsciously sent my subconsciousness to the surface.

On Philosophy

"Yes."

"Oh, I know most of it might have seemed obvious to a man like you, Gratton, but it was strangely new to me at the time. I realize now that much of what he said had been smoldering in my subconsciousness for years, but just the same, it was he who started me on the concrete thinking-out and writing of this shaggy monstrosity of a manuscript.

"Three years it has been in the writing. One of its by no means most important results is that you see me sitting here, Gratton, in a house that, pending my death, is only a loan to me.

To Be Continued Tomorrow

Diamond Dust

Our Braves are going places and doing things these days. In the past week they have won five out of six games from the champion St. Louis Cardinals and Chicago Cubs, rated as the two strongest teams in the circuit, and are now only two and one-half games back of third place.

Pitching has been responsible for the Warriors' success. Brandt, Seibold and Zachary, who had been carrying the mound burden unaided from the start of the season suddenly received some help from Frankhouse and Sherdel and the club became almost invincible immediately.

If the performances of Frankhouse and Sherdel against the Cubs and Moss against the Reds weren't flashes in the pan, the Tribe is going to be a serious flag contender right down to the finish.

The Cubs are supposed to be sure death to any southpaw who faces them, but Sherdel toyed with the Windy City sluggers in the second game of the series to win 9 to 3. His success will probably result in Manager Bill McKechnie sending Old Tom Zachary to the hill against Pat Malone in the final game this p. m.

Yesterday's victory was very sweet to the Braves since it was gained at the expense of their old teammate Bobby Smith. Four runs in the fourth and Walter Berger's seventh home run of the season with a man on in the fifth sent Bobby to the showers.

The Senators won their tenth straight victory by taking the Browns into camp for the second time in a row but they failed to gain in the pennant race as the Athletics came back to even the series with the Indians.

The Red Sox gained undisputed possession of fifth place again by beating the White Sox and are only 4½ games back of the fourth-place Indians.

Manager John Collins has predicted all season that Kline would become a star. The 230-pound rookie from Columbus sure looked like one against the White Sox, his second start of the season. In seven of the 11 innings, he sent the enemy down in order and from the third to the ninth he allowed just one batter to reach first.

The Sox have reduced to 25 players by sending Pitcher Walter Murphy and Outfielder John "Buster" Lucas to Richmond under option. Billy Marshall, rookie infielder from Dorchester, is going to be returned by the Nashville club and will be added to the Sox list until Bobby Reeves returns to action.

Manager Collins again shifted his lineup, sending Otis Miller to third in place of Urban Pickering and Al VanCamp to right in place of Earl Webb, who cut his finger badly Sunday night and will be out of the game for a few days.

Miller made two of the Sox four hits, scored the first run and knocked in the tying marker.

All the Red Sox players and their wives will be guests at the Bunker Hill Day banquet in Charlestown tonight. Manager Collins, who was born in the shadow of Bunker Hill, is down to make a speech.

Appoint 5 Assistants to Medford Coach

The Medford school committee today announced the appointment of Ed Brooks, Dyke Quackenbush, Ernest Roberts, Arthur Terrill and Ed Pidgeon as assistants to "Hubba" Collins, head athletic coach at Medford high school.

The election of all the assistants with the exception of Pidgeon was unanimous. The committee went into executive session before appointing Pidgeon by a vote of 6 to 3.

HOOVER AGAIN HEARD
Makes Three Talks in Three Days

Chief Executive Facing Microphones Today and Tomorrow

Yesterday, today and tomorrow, speaking from three cities in connection with three separate occasions, President Hoover adds to his long list of radio efforts. One of these addresses was delivered last night before the Republican State Editorial Association of Indiana, convened at Indianapolis.

Our Chief Executive has already set a record for presidential radio talks, having exceeded the number of speeches made by Calvin Coolidge by more than twenty. It's getting so that a microphone means nothing in a President's life.

Today Mr. Hoover is being heard during the Harding Memorial dedication services (2:45 p. m.), in which he joins with his predecessor, Mr. Coolidge, at Marion, Ohio. Both NBC and CBS networks transmit his voice again tomorrow when he jumps hurriedly to Springfield, Ill., to officiate at the Lincoln Memorial exercises being held in that city.

General Butler in Boston

Boston sends out one more national feature tonight, when Maj.-Gen. Smedley D. Butler, stormy petrel of the Devil Dogs, talks to the United States under American Legion auspices from Charlestown. WBZ will feed the general's voice down wire pipes to the WJZ network of NBC between 10 and 10:30 p. m. It will be remembered when the marine leader was cut off the waves down Philadelphia way (for alleged profanity) considerable discussion arose among local program bosses. Consequently, it is safe to predict that John (WBZ) Clark will lend an ear or two while General Butler broadcasts.

At last the weather permitted Gerry Harrison to hold forth and describe those fistic encounters from Braves Field last night through WAAB. As a bachelor announcer of sporting events, one might say it was "The Kid's Last Fight." From a matrimonial standpoint (Gerry says "I do" Thursday), well, that's another matter.

Radio in Retrospect . . . .

Charlie Chaplin still holds out on the broadcasters, despite reports that fabulous sums await his air debut. . . . There must be some fat bankrolls among the radio rahjahs. . . . Norman Baker, radio's bad boy, continues to operate his station, KTNT at Muscatine, Iowa, although the Federal Radio Commission banished him from the air. . . . He secured a restraining court order and his tirades go on . . . ever hear him? . . . Some spieler. . . . "Dr. Alleh Regeh," who wrote Charles Nelson on the blotter at a Cincinnati police station, is the latest fortune teller to get the hoboes' rush from radio chieftains. . . . The judge (rather unsympathetic) labeled his program as a racket . . . which presents a new angle. . . . Federal Radio Commission authority appears to be limited in fortune-telling censorship, so good old Cincinnati takes matters into its own municipal hands . . . establishing what they call a precedent. . . . Oh, yes, the Harvard-Yale boat race (regatta to you) is being broadcast Friday coming. . . . NBC has it listed, as does Columbia, with Ted Husing performing at the mike for the latter.

By Way of Suggestion . . . .

Some sponsor desiring to offer something for which listeners might write to receive, should try a booklet called "How to Avoid Hitting the Nail on the Thumb," certain to be helpful in connection with putting up screens on the summer bungalow. Either that or "Tricks in Traffic," giving motorists a few right answers for use during arguments with policemen. A pamphlet on "How and Where to Park Your Car" would find acceptance also. Three dented fenders could be requested in order to secure a copy.

Radio celebrities often have other favorites than themselves. For example, Rudy Vallee says Ben Alley is his pet star, as heard during the CBS feature, "Nocturne." The compliment is particularly significant when it is considered that these two artists are on rival networks.

On the Air

When Herbert Glover, CBS special events chief, said a radio description of the Poughkeepsie regatta wouldn't work out unless the bridge over the river be moved, CBS didn't lose hope. After lengthy plotting a plan to place Ted Husing on a launch before a short wave transmitter was evolved and Ted describes the races o'er WAAB starting at 4 and continuing until the Globe Trotter supplants him with news at 6:45.

In addition to the usual round of fireworks, the Bunker Hill post of the American Legion has secured Maj.-Gen. Smedley Butler to help celebrate June 17. Tonight at 10 on WBZ Gen. Butler will open the ceremonies in observance of the battle.

Tomorrow WAAB holds the spotlight with two special event b'dcasts. For the first time in five yrs. the Brookline Country Club horse races will be b'cast. Description of the races, starting at 2, will be given by Charlie Phelan, and Linus Travers will take care of the "color" angle. Between races Ann Arden, Evening American fashion editor and twice weekly WAAB style chat-ter, will describe the gowns worn by society. And Betty Alden, Boston American society editor, will give highlights on the society folk in attendance . . . An Americanization day p'gram, held at Revere Beach in observance of Bunker Hill Day, will be b'dcast at 5:30. Rep. Hoffman of N. J. will be principal speaker and others heard will be officials of the Commonwealth.

HOT AIR TALK: Capitol (N. Y.) Theater stage artists appear on the Theater Family NBC b'dcast, but Kate Smith, now appearing there, won't. She's a CBS exclusive . . . The U. S. leads the world in short wave stations with 14 of the total of 35 . . . Arthur Pryor, who leads his band nightly on the CBS, has never talked into a mike But he will Thursday on the Meet the Artist p'gram. Is he nervous? . . . Rafael Sabatini may write some radio plays . . . Ferde Grofe, Whiteman's arranger, may lead the Gypsies during the summer.—M. G. M.

I took his treatment faithfully, now I feel good. I have sent friends who suffer as I did to Dr. Walsh, and I make this statement in the hope of helping others who need skilled medical aid." Bridging the Gap

National conditions demand the immediate calling of Congress to bridge the gap between unemployment and prosperity. See editorial "Prosperity Loan Would Stop Hunger Amid Plenty."

Prosperity Loan Would Stop Hunger Amid Plenty

The social cost of the depression cannot be measured solely in dollars.

After personal savings are exhausted, the unemployed and their families pay a pitiful price in malnutrition, slackened energy, and in defeatism.

At this stage of the depression, the excesses and errors of the earlier boom period have been substantially corrected, and no real purpose is served in continuing business on a subnormal basis.

Every unnecessary month of delay in restoring normal business takes an appalling toll in the welfare of millions of afflicted families. Another Winter of maximum unemployment would be a national calamity.

Even though the incomes of the affluent have been reduced by depression, those who have retained the comforts of life find it difficult to visualize the acute suffering of the families of the unemployed.

The facilities of public and private charity have been overtaxed.

The presence of famished souls in the midst of markets glutted with foodstuffs seems strangely ironic, and constitutes an indictment against business management in the large.

The restoration of prosperity depends on setting up a new equilibrium in a business situation that has fallen out of balance.

Good times do not depend on mere abundance of population, but on the activity of well-paid persons with the means and the will to buy.

William Randolph Hearst sought to raise the issue above the realm of futile wishing by proposing a $5,000,000,000 Federal prosperity loan, the proceeds of which should be used in connection with an elaborate public works program which would absorb the unemployed.

The feasibility of raising such a huge fund in peacetime was demonstrated recently by an oversubscription of more than $5,000,000,000 to the $800,000,000 eighteen-year 3½ per cent loan.

Scientific economists recognize that business stability can be heightened by augmenting public works operations when private industry is slack, and by retarding them when private trade becomes active.

The only problem is the administrative task of drawing up a comprehensive public works program, including completion of projected internal waterways and power sites, with sufficient celerity.

Any needless delay is to be deprecated.

The Chief Executive, with the best of will, made premature gestures to conserve prosperity in the White House conferences in November, 1929, when he induced public utility and railroad corporations to keep up their spending programs early in 1930.

Such efforts were poorly timed, as they came before seemingly necessary deflation had been accomplished.

At this stage, after the event of deflation, prosperity-building plans can be safely launched.

The American people will be indisposed to continue in office any political servants who through inertia fail to use economical sound methods to bring back the full dinner pail to American workers.

The Hearst newspapers respectfully bring this observation to the attention of members of the House of Representatives and the Senate.

"The Tie That Binds"?

MUST TWO PEOPLE HAVE THE SAME INTERESTS IN ORDER TO MAKE A HAPPY MARRIAGE?

Elsie Robinson

A young man is asking. He's an engineer. She's a librarian. His life revolves around pumps and motors. Hers around books. Can they "get along with interests so widely divergent?"

Yes—if their attitudes click. ATTITUDES, not INTERESTS, are the "tie that binds." Yet not one lover out of ten thousand utters that truth.

Joan, likes to dance—so does John. John likes to play tennis—so does Joan. Having ascertained these facts, they marry in the blissful certainty that they were "meant for each other" and all will be well. Six months later, they wonder why they're bitter and bored.

John's a go-getter. Joan's a stand-patter. John likes to go at life on high. Joan likes to take her time. John has an "objective" mind—he lives outside himself—is interested in people and the passing show. Joan has a "subjective" mind—likes to dream and meditate—prefers to be alone a good deal of the time—is bored and irritated by too many people. John's business life—prompt, orderly, a stickler for system. Joan's careless—apt to dream about vague abstractions when she should be calling up the plumber.

John and Joan are both fine people, valuable and useful citizens. The world needs Joan's type of mind as much as it needs John's. BUT THE TWO TYPES WON'T MIX IN MARRIAGE.

"But opposites do mate," you say. "Look at the Joneses. She's so vivacious and he's a slow, quiet chap. She adores parties, and he despises them. Yet they've been happily married for eighteen years."

Yes, indeed—but look a little deeper. Outwardly, they're different—like to do different things. But inwardly they're all-of-a-piece. They're both conservative, timid about innovations, a bit smug and intolerant. Their tempo is the same. Neither one wants to forge ahead or lag behind the other in tackling life. As a consequence, neither one imposes strain or humiliation on the other. Neither character challenges the other or forces it into conflict. And so, they "get along" . . . not because their interests are alike, for they aren't . . . BUT BECAUSE THEIR FUNDAMENTAL ATTITUDES ARE THE SAME.

Attitudes, not interests, are the important things in love and life. If we could honestly determine each other's attitudes, we could practically eliminate the risk from marriage. But can we? Or will we? Hardly ever. FOR MOST OF US DO NOT KNOW HOW WE OURSELVES FEEL ABOUT LIFE . . . SO HOW CAN WE GIVE AN HONEST REPORT TO THE OTHER FELLOW, OR EXPECT ONE FROM HIM IN RETURN?

There never yet was a lazy human who didn't secretly believe that he was a bound for work—provided he could find the right work. Nor a coward who didn't think he was a dare-devil. Nor a slovenly who didn't believe he was an efficiency expert. Nor a slowpoke who wasn't positive that he was a leaping-lizard. And this is particularly true of those intoxicated by love. For no matter how different they are before marriage, they are positive that wedlock will magically "make them one." Which, of course, it never does.

IF YOU AREN'T "ONE" BEFORE MARRIAGE, IF YOUR TEMPOS AND TEMPERAMENTS DON'T MATCH, YOU NEVER WILL BE ONE AFTERWARDS. EVEN THOUGH YOU HAVE A SCORE OF MUTUAL INTERESTS.

Just Folks

The Trout Fishermen

To wade a running brook,
And stand where rushing waters coil
To cast a feathered hook.
And some with cards prefer to play
With sheltering walls about
Than work and wear their strength away
To catch a mess of trout.

To some the woods are dark and grim
And lonesome haunts and drear;
The song birds on the leafy limb
They never seem to hear.
They'd walk a stream and never see
The new hatch bursting out,
And so for them 'twould labor be
To angle long for trout.

But those who love the brooks they wade,
And know each turn and bend
Find pleasures for them newly made
Until the long day's end.
There is so much for them to see,
That they can do without
A chatterbox for company
Who go to fish for trout.

Like men who go alone to prayer
Alone they walk the stream
To see God's wonders everywhere
And of them think and dream.
They find in flower and bird and tree
A cure for every doubt,
Which may perhaps the reason be
They like to fish for trout.

New York Day by Day

The Old "Flash Age"

NEW YORK, June 16—The wicked fierceness of life in post-war New York has been hailed as the most decadent in history. The pious declare morals have vanished. Every other door opens into a speak-easy. Magnificent hotels house gambling hells. Night clubs are gangster hangouts.

Ornate apartment houses are often sin-stained sanctuaries. Youth and middle age have given lust the reins and are driving hard. Yet an editorial blast in the 90's shows whither winds were drifting in the days we sentimentalize as placidly mid-Victorian. In the fervid style of the era, it reads:

"All New York is in the midst of unbridled gaiety and dissipation. Splendid carriages with liveried coachmen and sleek horses dash up and down the avenues, depositing their perfumed inmates before brilliantly lighted, high stooped brown stone fronts.

"Through the closed doors comes the sound of merry voices, the tinkling of glasses, the ribald aboutings, and amid it all is the undertone of voluptuous music, soft, seductive, and to the righteous almost sinister. Until near dawn the barbaric tumult goes on.

"Dancing, feasting, flirting and gossip bind the hours with fragrant chaplets and the duties of life sink into soft oblivion. The night reels, like a drunken Bachante, away. Stars grow pale as the revelers depart, with bounding blood, to the embroidered chambers that hold sleep in silken chains."

Incidentally, people of that day did not refer to the epoch as "The Gay Nineties." To them it was "The Flash Age." Sixth avenue and around the old Haymarket was called "Satan's Circus." Sixth avenue was always crowded with merrymakers from 3 a. m. until 5.

The Bohemian quarter, with its 35 cent dinners, vin compris, was comparable to the Greenwich Village of a few years ago and was around Bleecker street. The milieu of sporting life was instead of in the Furious Forties, at Union Square. Here also was the theatrical district—the Rialto.

* * *

Two spectacular figures in the sporting world during the innocent bravado of "The Flash Era" were "Lucky" Baldwin and "Betcha-a-Million" Gates. They were colossal spenders. The "place to go" was Canfield's—next to dear old Del's. The most notorious dive of the time was Hattie Adam's wench house on 26th street with a green lit papier mache dragon in the hall and a door keeper dressed as Mephistopheles.

From an African outpost on the dinky Uganda comes a letter from a philosopher—a former New Yorker. Says he: "America has been sailing troubled waters but from this detached viewpoint I see no cause for worry. Abraham's wife might have had a sewing machine and Napoleon a motor car. Materials were waiting. The only thing changing is thought. And people are thinking more clearly than ever and will surmount every obstacle."

* * *

An out of town invitation resulted in a dinner at the most luxurious and populous speak-easy I ever saw. It is the marble-fronted mansion formerly occupied by a great banker. The shadowy murals, the fireplaces and other tapestried te-tera remain. There were a number of dining rooms, two orchestras, and an oval-shaped bar with a mullioned ceiling. Four bartenders were on duty. If offered all the studied elegance of a continental hotel. A lady in the party, upon departing, observed: "It is all so home-like I keep looking for someone to tell what a good dinner I had."

These richly carpeted and extravagantly draped Parthenons, I am told, are responsible for the passing of the night club. They are something new and a little different, offering a suspicion of grandeur patrons never saw before.

At one of the tiny topped tables in the bar a smartly dressed lady was languidly imbibing a thickish pink drink. A string trio half circled her, thrumming a soft melody. A pause in the music stumbled and a glass from his tray fell to the floor. She stood up in a spurting blaze of temper and called him the vilest name I ever heard. And I thought of the quotation concerning the silk purse from a sow's ear. No matter how splendorous the speak-easy—it is still a saloon.

I confess to perpetual uneasiness in speak-easies, sitting on the edge of a chair in wide-eyed expectancy of a raid. Just a big, frightened fawn!
